"APE MAN" IS SEEN IN EAST INDIES

Scientists Plan Expeditions to Capture "Missing Link" in Sumatra—May Prove Darwin Theory

The mysterious ape-man which has baffled all science in its endeavor to prove the Darwinian theory has been found in the Dutch East Indies, according to J. Van Herwaarden of Holland, who asserts that he came upon one of these creatures recently while hunting on the Island Poeloe Rimau, in the southernmost part of Sumatra.

Relating his encounter in a recent edition of De Tropische Natuur, he says:

Saw it up a Tree

I went out in search of a deer or a wild pig, without result, although I saw plenty of tracks to encourage me. I watched for over an hour, I glanced to the left and noticed something move in a not very tall tree, standing all by itself in a small clearing. For a good view of the object I walked around the tree and clearly saw a dark-haired, being standing on a limb with the front part of its body leaning against the tree as though it wished to hide its self and prevent detection. This surely must be a 'Sedapa', I thought. I was naturally quite excited. At first I only stared at the beast and tried to get a better view. I put my rifle down and started to climb up the tree, when I was about five or six feet above the ground I noticed a movement in the object. It moved slightly away from the main stem, bent itself forward and sideways, so that I had occasion to observe its head, its forehead and its eyes, which looked into mine. At first its movements were slow and deliberate, but after it had seen me it acted as though nervous, and moved about quickly.

"In order to better observe the strange creature I climbed down again. The front of the creature was also covered with hair, as well as its back, although the color of its front hair reached down below the shoulders, almost down to the middle of the back, and was fairly well kept and straight. Its head seemed to be somewhat more pointed toward the top than that of a human; the brown-colored face was almost entirely hairless, while the forehead was rather high. The eyebrows had the same color as the hair and were strongly developed. The eyes were not so normal, but the mouth was wide, which was especially noticeable when open.

The Royal Party
The Royal Party entered the grounds shortly after four o'clock, the Queen of Spain walking with the King and Queen, and following them Princess Beatrice and her granddaughters the Infantes Beatriz and Christina, the King Manuel and Queen Augusta Victoria. Arriving at the Garden Entrance were Princess Helena Victoria, Princess Andrew of Greece, and her two younger daughters, Lady Patricia Ramsey, the Infantes Beatrice of Spain, Lady Maud Carnegie and Lord Carnegie, the Duchess of Devonshire, and the Queen's Ladies-in-waiting, Countess Portocarrero and Lady Bertha Dawkins, the Grand Duke Michael of Russia and Countess Torby.

The Queen looked regal in a draped gown of turquoise-blue gorgon, which was trimmed with many rows of short fringe of a slightly deeper shade, and crystal ornaments at the foot of the skirt and the edges of the sleeves. Her toque was of swathed blue and mauve tulle with an upstanding mount of tiny ostrich feathers of the same shades.

The Queen of Spain looked radiant in a fringed gown and cloak of pearl grey, the latter being trimmed with a deep collar of stone marten fur and a heavy silk fringe falling from the waist. With it she wore a mantle of silver tulle, with a cluster of grey marabout plumes falling over the left shoulder. Queen Augusta Victoria was in a coat and dress of black charmeuse relieved with touches of white, and her hat which was of cloche shape, had a narrow brim of black lace.

Princess Andrew was charmingly dressed in a cloak and gown of ivory cloth and crepe-de-chine, and her small round hat of the same materials was wreathed with white gardenias. Princess Helena Victoria had a dress of mole-grey satin heavily embroidered with cut-steel and her cavalier hat was trimmed with long plumes shading from light to dark grey.

Princess Beatrice was in black satin and silver lace, and the Infantes Beatriz and Christina, now known as "the little ones," were dressed alike in magnificent United States of straw-colored alpaca and muslin with long sleeves and high collars.

Lady Patricia Ramsey was in light fawn nixon and lace with which she wore a big plumed hat of bronze satin and a lovely stole of Canadian sable.

Presentations
After a number of presentations had been made of distinguished visitors from the Dominions and Colonies among which were the Canadian Editors party many of whom were wearing blue and gold badges of the Canadian Maple Leaf, the King and Queen moved to where the general company were waiting

In Beautiful England

A Brief Account of our Pleasant Experiences With The Canadian Weekly Newspaper Party on our Trip abroad
By H. B. ANSLOW

London, July 5.—When we returned to our room at the Cecil Hotel on Dominion Day, we found among other invitations, a large official envelope, with the Royal Coat-of-Arms thereon. This contained an invitation to the King's garden party at Buckingham Palace, Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

This was to be the great event of our visit to London and great were the preparations for it. Perhaps we can not do better than republish from a London paper a full account of this function, which is as follows:

The King and Queen gave their second garden of the season yesterday afternoon in the grounds of Buckingham Palace.

Saturday was especially chosen by Their Majesties for the gathering, as being the best day upon which professional men and the many workers in other spheres who formed such a large proportion of those present could spare the time for relaxation, and there was abundant proof visible on every side to demonstrate how completely such kindly forethought was appreciated.

The lovely gardens were looking their best, and the guests, most of whom had arrived before four o'clock, lost no time in exploring their many beauties. From the huge square lawn at the back of the Palace they wandered along the borders of the lake, on past the great clumps of beautiful trees, to the marble summer house, and then back again to the North-Eastern corner of the lawn to await the arrival of the Royal Party.

Others preferred to take seats in the shade beneath the trees to the right of the gorgeous crimson and gold shawls and watch the seemingly endless streams of guests arriving from the Palace and from the gates at Constitution Hill and Grosvenor Place.

A kaleidoscope effect was produced by the beautiful coloured gowns, the colours of which were intensified by the dark morning coats and shining top hats worn by the men. Here and there were to be encountered the gorgeous native costumes worn by guests from India, Persia, and Siam, and a blaze of rich colour was made by the uniforms of the King's Indian, orderly officers.

A highly interested group of spectators were the palace servants, who, from their point of vantage on the parapet along the roof, must have had a wonderful view of the whole proceedings.

The Royal Party entered the grounds shortly after four o'clock, the Queen of Spain walking with the King and Queen, and following them Princess Beatrice and her granddaughters the Infantes Beatriz and Christina, the King Manuel and Queen Augusta Victoria. Arriving at the Garden Entrance were Princess Helena Victoria, Princess Andrew of Greece, and her two younger daughters, Lady Patricia Ramsey, the Infantes Beatrice of Spain, Lady Maud Carnegie and Lord Carnegie, the Duchess of Devonshire, and the Queen's Ladies-in-waiting, Countess Portocarrero and Lady Bertha Dawkins, the Grand Duke Michael of Russia and Countess Torby.

Bladder weakness remedied

"I suffered from bladder weakness and frequent urination. I had tried other kidney remedies, but got no relief. Was advised to take Gin Pills, did so, and after taking half a box noticed much improvement."
