"GEORGINA'S REASONS," glease any h. " the young man naurmuret, drawing her hand surreptiticusly into "Of my absurd infatuation !" A NEW AND FASCINATING CONTIN-

"Of my absurd infatuation!" "And would it, dearest?" "Yes, very like. But I don't mean to try. I shan't go to Europe—not when I don't want to. But it's better I should see less of you—even that I should ap-pear—a little—to give you up." "A little? What do you call a little?" Georgina said nothing for a moment. "Well, that, for instance, you shouldn't hold my hand quite so tight!" and she disencaged this conscious member from UED STORY. BY HENRY JAMES.

Of course, after Mrs. Gressie's message, his visits were practically at an end; he wouldn't give the girl up, but he wouldn't be beholden to her father for the opportunity to condisengaged this conscious member from the pressure of his arm, "What goed will that do ?" Benyon asked.

"It will make them think it's all over to her father for the opportunity to con-verse with her. Nothing was left for the tender couple—there was a curious mutual distrust in their tenderness—but -that we have agreed to part." "And as we have done nothing of the

Nothing was left for the tender couple—there was a curious mutual distrust in their tenderness—but to meet in the squares, or in the topmost streets, or in the sidemost avenues, the spring afternoons. It was especially during this phase of their relations that Georgina struck Benyon as imperial. Her whole person seemed to exhale a tranquil, happy consciousness of having broken a law. She never told him how And every species of diseases arising from disordered LIVER, KIDNEYS, STOMACH, BOWELS OR BLOOD. T. MILBURN & CO., Proprietors, Toronto. TORONTO RAILWAY TIME TABLE proken a law. degree she dissimulated to her parents, and how much, in regard to their con-tinued acquaintance, the old people sus-pected and accepted. If Mr. and Mrs. Gressie had forbidden him the house it was not apparently because they wished her to walk with him in the Tenth avenue or to sit at his side under the "Oh, yes, I'll marry you !" And she moved away across the street. That was the way she had said it, and it was very characteristic of her. When he saw that she really meant it, he wished they were omewhere else-he hardly knew whe ing lilace in Stuyvesant Square. the proper place would be-so that he might take her in his arms. Neverthe-He didn't believe that she told lies in Twelfth street; he thought she was too less, before they separated that day he had said to her he hoped she remem-bered they would be very poor, remindmperial to lie; and he wondered what she said to her mother when, at the end of nearly a whole afternoon of vague ing her how great a change she would find it. She answered that she shouldn't peregrination with her lover, this rustling, bristling matron asked her where she had been. Georgina was capable of mind, and presently she said that if this was all that prevented them the sooner they were married the better. Benyon's ignorance of her pretexts is a proof that this rather oddly-mated couple never arrived at perfect intimacy—in spite of a fact which remains to be related. He thought of this afterward, and thought The ceremony should take place secretly,
