ANOTHER LETTER FROM FRANCE

Corporal Mark A. Starratt Writ's His Sister, Mrs. Beatrice Messenger, at Mount Rose

Dear Sister:—I must get busy today, and write you a letter and let you know I am still alive and that I received your letter sometime ago, before I went on leave in fact. Did you get the cards and note I sent you from London? I certainly had a fine time over there and wish you could have been there too. I had never been there before so everything was new to me. It was pretty nice to get back to good old Blighty again, believe me. It was exactly 29 months from the day I left for France, that I landed in England again. Imagine my feelings if you can, but it's no use you trying either, for you cannot do it. I felt as if every one I met was my friend, and when I went to bed that night after a hot bath and a square meal I had not a care in the world. Well there are a thousand and one different places to see in London, and I managed to take in a few of them. Perhaps I'll have a chance again some day to see more of it.

I suppose people's tastes differ, but places like the Westminster Abbey did not interest me so much as the Zoological Gardens, though of course the Abbey is a wonderful place, but I suppose I did not fully appreciate the architectural beauty of the place. In that little book I sent you, you will see a picture of the Rose window, but you can get no idea of the beauty of the window from the picture. Many of the tombs of the different sovereigns, and other people famous in English history have been built up all round with sandbags: to protect them from bombs, I suppose. The colors of a lot of the Canadian regiments are in there too, hung on the tomb of General Wolfe. But the works of nature appeal more to me than the work of art and I spent more time out doors and on the river. Was up to the Zoo in Regents Park one day, and saw every kind of beast, bird, fish, insect and in fact everything that walks, crawls or flies I guess.

Madame Tussand's Waxwork exhibition is very interesting too. Everybody that was anybody in English history is there, or at least a very life like imitation of them. The tableaux mentioned in that catalogue I sent you are very good too, but after looking at the one representing the Execution of Mary Queen of Scots, I was almost ready to cry it looked so real and pathetic.

There were some gruesome looking sights in the Chamber of Horrors. A very imaginative person would be likely to have had dreams after visiting it. But the best of all was the day at Windsor Castle. Windsor is about an hour's ride from the city by train. We got out there about 11 o'clock, just as the guard was changing. The King was at the castle; so the guard mounting was quite an important ceremony. A guide took us in tow then and showed us all over the place except the Tower, which I would liked to have got into. They say one can see over 13 counties from the top of it on a clear day. The state apartments were wonderful, beyond words. Our guide explained everything as we went along but by the time we got through our head was so full of a confused bunch of dates and facts that it was impossible to get them all straightened out.

Afterward came luncheon and I was wondering what on earth I was going to say if Princess Mary should speak to me which she eventually did, but it was only to ask me if I would have some more tea, and I managed to thank her though I suppose I blushed like a school boy. However, they were all very nice, and our numbers sort of gave us confidence so we came through with a flying colors. Princess Mary and Princess Alice were both there and several other ladies. Lady Minto was one of them and she talked quite a long time to us Canadians. She had been in nearly every part of Canada when Lord Minto was Governor General. Afterward we went up to the reception room when the King and Queen were to see us. We just marched slowly past them, and they stopped two or three of us, shook hands and talked to us for a few minutes and then it was all over. It was about 3 o'clock when we came out of there and we then went down to the river, got some boats and stayed until about five. We then went back to the city, had tea at a restaurant and afterward to the theatre so it was quite a day's outing.

Not the least of the joy of leave was the joy of getting some good things to eat. I had hardly expected that food would be as plentiful as it was, but I had no difficulty in getting all I wanted. Taking the war and everything into consideration, things did not cost so very much more than when I was there in 1916. Anyway, to sum it all up I sure had one dandy time, and I hope to have the opportunity again some time of visiting London. However, if the war keeps on progressing as favorably as in the past months or so, I might be visiting Canada by this time next year, and that would be a little better than London or Paris, wouldn't it? Things are coming our way pretty good now, so will hope for the best. Must close now, love to all.

Your loving brother,
MARK
