

Jim Higgins since his flight from Canada is working on a sheep ranch in Montana.

Joe Sumner in a saloon on the American side gets into trouble in a gambling game through cheating. He holds up the room, backs out and gets away.

Sumner is causing the Police a lot of trouble, as there are all kinds of complaints going to Regina about his actions. The Chief sends for Corp. Smith and tells him he is to bring in Sumner, dead or alive.

The Police get word that Sumner is in the Indian Reserve trying to cause an uprising. When Corp. Smith and a constable arrive at the Reserve, Sumner has left.

Sumner, in need of provisions, enters a store in Moose Jaw. Corp. Smith, passing, sees Sumner's horse standing at store and gets off to investigate. Sumner inside store sees Smith and hides behind counter, close to storekeeper, and threatens his life if he gives him away. Smith enters store and is told by storekeeper that Sumner left by the back way. Smith goes out after him. Sumner leaves store, runs off with Smith's horse, jumps on his own and gets away.

Jim Higgins comes back home to make arrangements with his daughter to sell out and come and live with him in Montana.

Joe Sumner, thinking a policeman's uniform would help him out in his next adventure, bribes an Indian police guide at Moose Jaw to steal him an old uniform.

Sumner puts on the uniform and goes to the Higgins' homestead, determined to take Blanche away with him. He arrives at the homestead as it is getting dark.

Jim Higgins, on looking through the window, sees a policeman coming towards his house, and, thinking he is coming for him, hides himself. Joe Sumner enters the house and soon lets Blanche know his intentions. He gets hold of Blanche, who struggles and screams. Her father hearing his daughter scream, comes out of hiding and goes to his daughter's aid. Sumner strikes her father and knocks him down; he crawls over to where he keeps his rifle.

Sumner has Blanche in his arms and is about to open the door to go out, when Higgins shoots him. Shortly after that there is a knock on the door. They conceal body as quickly as possible.