Growth of Rural Telephones.—The call of the telephone bell is no uncommon sound in the farmhouse to-day. Men are called for special work, prices are learned, buying and selling is done, orders go to the butcher and the grocer and friendly gossip and chat are among the many things that keep the busy rural lines buzzing. The farmer or fruit-grower with a telephone is no more isolated than his brother in the city—indeed, often far less so—for the city man, as a rule, does not know his next door neighbor. Besides, the telephone is a real money-maker, as it keeps the farmer so closely in touch with market prices and conditions. The initial cost is low, and the line when installed belongs to the farmers, so that there is only running expenses to pay. This, coupled with the fact that the organization of a company and installing the line is made easy by the co-operation and expert advice of the different large telephone supply-houses, which is given free of cost, has been a large factor in the increasing popularity of rural telephones.
