

the war and the heartaches and sorrows of the millions of living, but consider him one of the world's most valuable prizes of the war, exceeding great care should be taken of him for the financial benefit of the soldiers and kin of those who died. If necessary, he could be kept in seclusion, should be as safe here as at St. Helena or any other place. The ex-Empress might be invited to accompany him. Probably no harm for her to go about as long as she behaves herself. Have moving-pictures taken, showing their quarters here, and some views taken occasionally of their mode of living, and I believe a great majority of the readers of the world would pay well to see them, and the proceeds from this to go to the Soldiers' Fund as stated. They should be a vastly better attraction than Barnum's Jumbo, and less expense getting this exhibit before the eyes of the world. The returns from which might in time make the Canadian soldiers real millionaires, which I understand some were called while over there. Likely over a billion human souls in the world to-day, perhaps the greater part would pay many times to see the possible chang-
