worth quoting as a pithy summary of the Commander-in-Chief's views: Generally speaking, as a result of your very great experience from the war, have you any particular suggestions to make with regard to any pracely of the service as to improve branch of the service, as to improvement in organization for war or for will take the cavalry first; what

I think is that in all future wars we should require a far larger number of mounted men than we have ever had hitherto, and that the cavalry must be prepared to flight on foot much more than they have ever done before. I am impressing the import-ance of this on all cavalry officers, and pointing out, that, although it is very desirable that cavalry should be expert with their swords and trained for shock tactics, my belief is that in future wars shock tactics. much more than they have ever done before. I am impressing the importance of this on all cavalry officers, and pointing out, that, although it is very desirable that cavalry should be expert with their swords and trained for shock tactics, my belief is that in future wars shock tactics. Will be few and far between, and that cavalry will have to fight far more frequently on foot than they have ever thought of doing before. We are now arming the cavalry with a rifle, the same as the infantry. It has been shortened by five inches, and reduced by one pound in weight, without losing any of its power.

No More Lances.

We are also, I hope, going to do away with the lance for service. It is a most inconvenient weapon when in the way when they are scouting.

** ** As regards the infantry, out aim must be to encourage individuality amongst the men, and to make the company and section commanders understand that they must depend more upon themselves than has hitherto been necessary, because the moment a battalion now gets into action the companies are greatly spread out and the commander loses and control over them.

*I mentioned in my narrative that in the attack on Diamond Hill the men advanced at thirty paces in terrated to make the company alone, it is impossible use of the finest and most delicately adjusted rifle that can be men advanced at thirty paces in the result of the company commander can do very much, and we are now trying to get them to instruct their subalterns, sergeants and corporals

The same general view is expounded more fully and vividly by Sir Ian Hamilton, who is a con-vinced believer in the superiority of quality ever numbers. It is interest-ing to note that Sir Ian Hamilton strongly combats the ylew of the "timid school of theorists," who hold that the chief lesson of modern war advantage possessed by the

If the experience of the South African war can be taken as a guide, the big battallon phase is now about the comparatively small, enclosed and highly civilized countries of Europe. For where numbers are limited by questions of transport and supply, the folly of despatching anything but superlatively good soldiers is accentuated.

In other words, while with our regular army the one important thing is to improve the quality with-mind for the whole of the day, or even for several nights, and striving with all his might to carry out what he has been told by a superior who is no longer present, and who, for all he may know, is dead. Within a mile of the enemy and in open country it will no longer be possible for the brigade-major to gallop up to the colonel with a folded piece of paper prescribing his next movement. Nor can the colonel send his adjutant to tell the capitala to change direction or reinforce.

that even the company commander can do very much, and we are now trying to get them to instruct their subalterns, sergeants and corporals to look after their men.

I think that is the chief thing in the matter of infantry training, and to teach the men to shoot better. As regards artillery, I do not know that we can improve them very much, except training to men, and the private soldier of the future must be sufficiently educated to take every advantage of all that science can do for him.

As regards artiflary, I do not know that we can improve them very much, except train them to separate and conceal their guns, and to give them better weapons, both of which we are now rapidly doing.

If attacks are, indeed, to be conducted as they are now on the continent of Europe, or as they were until recently in our own army, then this is undoubtedly true; but to my idea, under skilful leading, the attack has rather gained than lost by the new conditions.

If the experience of the South African war can be taken as a guide, the big battallor phase is now about to pass away, and we are entering upon a period when the efficiency of an army will depend far more upon the morae and high training of the individuals who compose it than upon the mere numbers of these individuals who may be available.

I believe that an army composed of individuals each so highly trained as to be able to take full advantage of the terrain, and of his wonderful modern weapon, and each animated with a morale and trained to an efficiency which will make him capable of acting in battle on his own initiative, will break through, scatter and demolish less efficient opposing forces, even if greatly superior in numbers. No doubt this principle will be more strikingly exemplified in the case of such countries as we are accustomed to wage war in, than in the comparatively small, enclosed and highly civilized countries of Europe.

While it used to be the custom to cut the thing is to improve the quality without troubling too much about meronumbers, numbers may atill have a certain advantage for the home dence of England. It must not be supposed that in insisting apon the necessity for individual-initiative and training I wish in any way to ignore or depreciate discipline. Discipline there must be, but it must be discipline on a higher plane.

It must be the aim of the new discipline to make the private soldier capable of keeping steadfastly in mind for the whole of the day, or even for several nights, and striving thereby the stomach and heart ac-

st of the mental devices for woo ing sleep have failed because they have nearly always tried to resort they have made a homoeopathic at-tempt to stop thinking by thinking something else - a process which might also be called "elimina-tion by substitution." Just all think-ing, spontaneous or forced, draws more or less hood to the brain premore or less bood to the brain spre-veots deep inhalations, and bars the gate of the kingdom of dreams. Any device, on the other hand, which will make one take deep, long breaths spontaneously (the invariable fore-runner of sleep) may be counted upon as a genuine remedy for insomnia. Even deep breathing which is forced is better than any purely mental at-tempt to win sleep. But if the deep breathing can be produced involun-tarily one is sure of a passport to Nodland.

After several nights of experiment breathing can be produced involuntarily one is sure of a passport to Nodland.

After several nights of experiment to this end the present writer decided to apply the principle adopted by the masseurs, who begin their manipulations "at the point faithest from the seat of difficulty," which, in the case of insomnia, would be the feet. Lying on the right side, with the knees together, and considerably flexed, the victim of insomnia should begin to pedal both his feet slowly up and down, with the movement entirely in the ankles. The pedaling should keep time with the natural rhythm of respiration, and be continued until it is followed by deep and spontaneous breathing. Several geople who have tried this remedy report that invariably deep breathing invariably begins before they have pedalled up and down a dozen times. In obstinate cases of insomnia the patient may need to keep up the pedalling two or three minutes, or even more, with intermissions, if hecesary. The treatment may also by varied by moving the feet alternately, instead of simultaneously, though the latter method has proved the more speedily efficacious in the cases known to the writer. The explanation of the result obtained is probably simple. The blood is pumped from the head, and with the removal of brain tension a general relazation follows, with a consequent deep respiration and its resulting sleep.—Good Housekeeping.

This appendage is capable of a limited amount of motion. It wags slightly when the Infant takes the breast. There is no evidence of any bone in this "tail." It feels tough and clastic. It appears to be connected by soft attachments to the sacrum. The tip of the coccyx can be felt in its normal situation, under cover its normal situation, under cover of the 'tail.' All the other parts of this baby were normal. The parents absolutely refuse to entertain the idea of having the tail removed.
