The Cat. A little English girl wrote the following essay on a cat: "The cat is a square quadruped, and, as is customary with square quadrupeds, has its legs at the four corners. If you want to please this animal you must stroke it on the back. If it is very much pleased it sets up its tail quite stiff, like a ruler, so that your hand cannot get any farther. The cat is said to have nine lives, but in this country it seldom needs them all because of Christianity."

"Certainly. It is coining money, and your safury as president is $20,000." Here the old gentleman groaned again. "I'went away for a vacation. What more natural than that my sonin-law should vote my stock? I gave him authority to do so, and I've no doubt that the young rascal recalled all that I had told him. Why He Disliked the Man.

1 once heard of a man who, discussing a name on the visiting list, said to his wife, "You know perfectly well that I don't like that man." "Don't you think you are a little unreasonable?" asked the wife. "Your dislike arose because he did not answer a letter you wrote him, and you found afterward that the letter was hung up all summer in the pocket of your overcoat and was never sent to him at all." "Yes, I know that," was the rejoinder, "but it was so long before I found it out that I couldn't overlook his rudeness, and I never forgave him, and I don't believe I ever shall." There is a good deal of ill feeling in this world that is without any firmer foundation.

A PRINCELY PRINTER. H. S. H. Prince Louis of Battenberg Knows How to "Stick Type."

Dr. George Johnson, the Dominion statis ician, tells a good story about H. S. H. Prince Louis of Battenberg, rear-admiral of the second cruiser squadron, who has been stationed in Quebec and who opened the Industrial Fair at Toronto on the 29th August. Lord Dufferin came down to Halifax soon after being sworn into office as Governor-General to see what he could do to pacify the Anti-Unionists of the or to pacify the Anti-Unionists of the Province, then still refusing to recognize the Dominion. The officers of the aimy and pavy, of course, gave him a cordial reception, and the officers of the Royal Alfred (flagship), proposed to give a ball in his honor on board. On the morning of the ball, looking over matters to see if overwhime was all the morning of the ball, looking over matters to see if everything was all right, they made the discovery that they were without dance programs. That was something not to be passed over. They must have the programs. What would the young ladies do? What the young gallants? There would be a mixing up of engagements sufficient to keep gallants and young ladies explaining for a formight. The Royal Alfred's officers would be laughed at for not knowing how to manage a "hop" for not knowing how to manage a "hop on board ship.

One of the young officers was sent posthaste to get the programs printed. When he sought the printing offices, lo and behold! all were closed. It was a holiday and the printers had taken a day off. After searching through the town, the officer found one newspaper office, the editor of which was alone grinding out an editorial for the hext day's issue. On being told the nature of his mission the editor said he himself did not know one type from another—that the mystery of printing was beyond him. "Now," says the officer, 'il see daylight. If we can get into the printing office I can set up the type. I am a printer by trade, and between us we can get out of the dilemma." The key was found. The two went upstairs to the printing office. The officer-printer took off his coat, was a holiday and the printers had tak The officer printer took off his coat The officer-printer took off his coat, rolled up his sleeves and "stuck type" for all he was worth. A hand press, used for "pulling proof," was utilized for printing the programs. The work was pronounced first-class. The programs were tied up secundum artem, and Prince Louis of Battenberg-for that was the printer's name-hurrled on board the flagship with the precious parcel which saved the situation; and that night at the ball "all went merry as a mairiage-bell."

Dr. Johnson recalls the impression he then received that Prince Louis was a first-class printer, and knew his trade thoroughly. Prince Louis says he "recalls the incident perfectly. he has been proud of his feat eve

SHOT CASCADE RAPIDS

Remarkable Adventure of Freque Nay

lor In a Leaky Boat. Freddie Naylor, the six-year-old so of Mr. and Mis. W. B. Naylor, of Montreal, was on Saturday, August 19, 1905, the hero of a most sensational boating adventure in the Cascade rapids. Alone in a leaky, old rowboat, standing up all the way, seemingly in perfect unconcern, he shot the long, dangerous and surging rapids, holding in his grip all through his perilous voyage a little paddle. When rescued after he had reached comparatively calm waters, his greeting to the boatmen coming toward him was "Am I paddling right?" Mrs. Naylor and her son were sum-mering at the Hotel Perron. On Satmering at the Hotel Perron. On Saturday about noon the boy managed to escape his mother's observation, and slipped over to the water's edge, where there was a leaky, old boat moored. Getting into it, he managed to cut loose, and to the horror of the few of the villagers who had noticed him by this time the first erroft and its little this time, the frail craft and its little occupant were drawn into the swift, treacherous waters, and onward into he turbulent rapids, to what everyone believed would be his death,

In an astonishing short period of time the whole village had turned out, and the wildest excitement leigned. Attempts at rescue from the shore were fruitless, and the agony of the unfortunate mother who had been summoned, may be better imagined than described.

Just when he was midway in his terrible journey, the boy was caught sight of from a steamer which was then shooting the lapids. To launch a boat to rescue him was impossible but a life belt was thrown out, but it came nowhere near him, nor, indeed, did he pay any extention to it. did he pay any attention to it.

At length, the little boat emerged from the move turbulent portion of the rapids, and entered the calmer waters at the foot. Word had been hastily passed along, and several attempts were made to put out to the rescue. were made to put to the rescue. Finally, two French-Canadians put out from a mill, and succeeded in navigating the craft to a point where they could head off the youthful adventurer. When they reached him they found him drenched, of course, from head to root, but none the worse for his as-counding experience.

According to veteran boatmen at Caside no such journey has ever been nade before through these rapids, and none could have believed it possible that a small boat of the kind would live in such turbulent, treacherous
