Mrs. Worthington-Potts was doing some shopping. When not engaged in domestic duties Mrs. W.-P. was chairman of the local "Cleanliness mato sauce. First" campaign. Cleanliness was her all-absorbing passion. Why, she was so mad about it that she even washed water before she drank it. But now she was shopping. A big pile of groceries lay on the counter. and she began to pack them into her basket, handing the shopman a tenshilling note and a half-crown by way of payment for her purchases. The shopman took the money, and, puting the half-crown in his mouth, bit it to see if it was genuine. Mrs. Worthington-Potts was horrified at this insanitary proceedings. "My goodness!" she exclaimed. "Aren't you afraid of microbes?" "Yes." replied the canny shopkeeper, "I am, mum; but I'm still more afraid of gettin' bad money."
