THE LILY OF THE STRATH.

CHAPTER XVII.

WILLIAM DENMAN AND WANDERING NEAR THE

OLD BRICK-FARROW TO STATHAM.

It was a bright morning in the month of May, and the sun was shining brightly on the hills of the Strath. William Denman was walking alone, his hands in his pockets, his head bowed, and his heart heavy. He was a man of about thirty years of age, with a fair complexion, and a well-to-do appearance. He was dressed in a dark suit, and a white shirt, with a dark tie. He was walking towards the old brick-farrow, which was a well-known landmark in the Strath. The farrow was a long, narrow strip of land, which had been the property of the Denman family for many years. It was now the property of the Strath, and was being sold by the Strath. William Denman was a man of great wealth, and he was very fond of the farrow. He had been walking there for many years, and he had never before. He was now walking there for the first time, and he was feeling very strange. He was feeling as if he was in a dream, and he was not sure if he was really there or not. He was walking towards the old brick-farrow, and he was feeling very strange. He was feeling as if he was in a dream, and he was not sure if he was really there or not.
