Jeannie Sinclair,

THE LILY OF THE STRATH.

town. Here William paused till Robert overlook him.

'This road will lead us to the Abbey, won't it?' he said, pointing to the path which stretched eastward.

'It will,' answered Robert. 'Shall we go there now! We have ample time, for the hour is yet early; and if I profier the money to M'Quirk before the hour of twelve, the bond will be legally cancelled.'

'We had better go now,' replied William.' I cannot leave you till I know that M'Quirk's power to annoy you is gone. The moment that matter is settled the time of parting will have come, for by to-night I shall be far from hence, and unless we meet elsewhere we shall never see each other again.'
Tears sprung into Robert's eyes, and his voice was tremulous as he rejoined—'And is our friendship to end thus? After our many communions of heart and soul, are we so suddenly to part and know each other no more?'

'Fate has decreed it,' responded William mournfully. 'It only proves to us how much we are the sport of circumstances. But ter our many communions of heart and soul, are we so suddenly to part and know each other no more?

'Fate has decreed it,' responded William mournfully.' It only proves to us how much we are the sport of circumstances. But come amd the foliage of the trees, I see some one crossing the bridge, and I cannot bear to meet any of the people of the Strath.—Come, my friend, let us be gone?

'Tis Wandering Ned, saud Robert.
'Ned, is it?' rejoined William, standing suddenly still. 'Ah, I should like to see him and bid him farewell.'
So the two friedds sat down upon the bank at the turn of the road, to await the coming of Ned. The latter had not yet perceived them, but they could observe him coming up the slope, and noticed that he was in great haste, and deeply absorbed in meditation.—He was gesticulating vigorously with his right arm, and muttering to himself as he swung along.

The moment he came into view, Bree gave a deep growl, and was about to rush towards him, when his master authoritatively restrained him. Ned's car caught the growl, and it caused him to look up.

It would be difficult to describe the rapid changes which Ned's countenance underwent when he saw the two youths. Astonishment, doubt, hesitation and then the gladdest recognition showed themselves by turns in his speaking face, and at length he held up his arms in silent amazement.

'My gracious me, is it possible?' he at length found power to exclaim. 'Maister Robert and Maister Demman custin' up at last, when everybody had gi'en them up for lost. Eh, sirs, but I'm blythe to see ye.—Welcome hame, welcome hame. There's mony a warm welcome awaitin' ye in the Strath; but mine is as true and sincere as ony o' them.

'Ay, and ture and sincere than most. Ned, observed Robert, as he and his friend.

oran, but mise is as true and sincere as ony o' them.

'Ay, and truer and sincerer than most, Ned, 'observed Robert, as he and his friend warmly shook the wanderer's honest hand, 'But is it really you, and no yer ghaists, that stand afore me? added Ned, whose excitement was increasing rather than abating.
'Do we look like ghosts, Ned?' asked William, with a grave yet sweet smile.
'Oh! Maister Demma,' cried Ned, 'hoo my heart dirls tae hear yer rich voice; and tae think that ye sud turn up this day, tae, o's days in the year. I canna—no, I canna—tell ye hoo glad I am.'
William uttered a groan, and turned away his head.
'You pain him, Ned.' whispered Robert.

William uttered a groan, and turned away his head.

'You pain him, Ned,' whispered Robert.
'You forget that this is a sad and heavy day for him. We heard in California that the Baronet had been murdered. We heard nothing of his strange preservation, and Mr Denman returned expecting to find Jeannie free. The news was told us last night at Shawhead, and you may guess how great was the blow for him.
'Dinna be cast doon, sir,' exclaimed Ned. Thark as things look, the brichtness is just at hand. Ye think ye are in the midst o' hopeless sorrow, and yet ye are on the brink—the very brink—o' fullest joy. Ye mind o' oor last meetin' at the rum the day afore ye gaad awa?

o' oor last meetin' at the ruin the day afore ye gand awa; and also the hope you would have had me cherish. To day proves how utterly delusive were your words.'

'This day pruives naething o' the 'kind, but will just pruive the very contrary,' cried Ned, with vehement earnestness. 'I said then, and I say noo, that the Lily o' the Strath will ne'er wed wi' Sir Fergus Sinclair.'

then, and I say noo, that the Lily o' the Strath will ne'er wed wi' Sir Fergus Sinclair.'

'Hush, Ned, leave this wild raving,' said William. 'Hark! Even now there comes to us the peal of the marriage bell.'

'I ken that,' returned Ned. 'A' hody thinks that the marriage is tae tak' place. Sir Fergus and Jeannie think it themsell—though, weel a wat, the puir lasssie has but a wae heart ower the prospect o' it. But, for a' that, it wuona be, and this minds net that I manns stay here, for I hae work tae do afore eleven o'clock.'

'Farewell, Ned,' said William, holding out his hand again. 'Il's not likely we shall see each other again in this world.'

'No see ane anither again!' repeated Ned.' And what for that, Maister Denman? I thout tye liket the Strath sae well that ye were gaun tae live in it?'

'Not as circumstances have gone, was the mourful reply. 'Had my tot been happier, it would have been my greatest joy to live in the Strath; but my wounded heart will best bear its anguish in a distant locality.' TO BE CONTINUED.

GREAT SUFFERING.—How many thousard ladies, both old and young, have passed through great suffering from that terrible demon Neuralgia, some passing sleepless night, twisting about in great agan, but succeed in getting relief after a tew hours of misery only to be renewed again in a short time with the unirelenting exeruciating pan. Others have a lew hours of misery only to be renewed again in a short time with the unrelenting excruciating pain. Others have had to endure this torture for weeks at a time, both day and night, until nearly exhausted, and almost wishing for the angel of death to relieve them. But hope dawns, a cure has been discovered, a rapid and reliable cure. The remedy is called Dr. J. Briggs' Allevantor. It can be tested free all hours of the day at No. 6, King-st.; West, and is sold by all druggists. Sold by E. Harvey & Co., Guelph, June 28.

Health is Evenoth.— To prevent or conquer disease is one of the grandest attainments ever aimed at by man; and Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers will as sure cure coughs, colds, tickling in the throat and gulmonary complaints, as war destroy. Severe colds if not attended to sooner or later lead to incurable consumption, and the strength of the strong est soon fails if neglected. The readiest and best means known for the cure of these complaints is "Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers," which have been thoroughly tried for the last twenty years, and have nover been known to fail. Singers and public speakers will also derive great benefit from the use of them Sold by all medicine dealers, at 25cts per box.

Why will you Suffer.—The Cana dian Pain Destroyer instantly and permanently removes all pain from the system, and is decidedly the best medicine known for the cure of rheumatism, pleurisy, neuralgia, tic deloreaux, tooth ache, cholic, burns, frost bites, &c., and is so cheap that all can afford to buy it. Sold by all medicine dealers.

"Five Minutes for Refreshments."—Everybody who has travelled by railroad has heard the above announcement, and has probably suffered from enting too hastily, thereby sowing the seeds of dyspepsia. It is a comfort to know that the Porturian Syrup will cure the worst cases of dyspepsia, as thousands are ready to testify.
