what Minister could deny anything to the generous friend who relieved him of his debt, and who every four months reminded him of the favor? The leader's concluding remarks had special reference to the Province of Quebec. As to the Mercier-Pacaud charges, he said, "the measure of justice which is called for in this Parliament we want dealt out also in the Province of Quebec, and after investif action." dielec sulfered 130 years ago was a mag-nificent piece of oratory. The highest literary art was displayed in the contrast which he drew between Montcalm and his fellow-officers paying back their own sal-aries into the treasury of the colony, and the intendant Bigot and his fellow-rogues plundering the treasury, weakening the re-sources of the colony, paralyzing the arm of valor and paving the way for the invasion and conquest. It was a situation which forcibly recalled Milton's lines:

In vain doth valor bleed, While avarice and rapine rule the land. "Quebec," said the Liberal leader; "has again become the prey of official jackals. Again we see evils such as were denounced by Montcalm, and if Montcalm were here he would denounce this Government as he denounced Bigot and his followers in the old days. Montcalm is not here, but his example is here and if notificial controllers and the second controllers and the second controllers and the second controllers and the second controllers are second controllers.

More marvelous oddities than any seasonhas yet Province of Quebec, and after investif at ion the Province of Quebec, and after investif at ion where blame and censure are described to blame and censure be given, and the the guilty be punished." The passage in which he drew a parallel between the corruption of to-day and the corruption from which Quebec suffered 130 years ago was a magnificent piece of oratory. The highest
