

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

CURE SICK HEAD ACHE

Headache, yet Carter's Little Liver Pills are equally valuable in Constipation, curing and preventing this annoying complaint while they also correct all disorders of the stomach, stimulate the liver and regulate the bowels. Even if they only cured one of these troubles, they would be worth the price. In fact, they cure all of them. In fact, they cure all of them. In fact, they cure all of them.

PROFESSOR PAUL.

The Story of a Life's Love.

I have been asked so many times by my brother artist, to whom I have read extracts from the history of Professor Paul, that I have at last decided to write the story of his life. It contains the story of his life almost word for word as he related it to me, for I always made it my first duty during the continuance of my interviews with him to write down each morning all that he had told me upon the previous evening. This I did with so much care, and at the same time endeavored, as far as my memory would allow, to preserve the very language which he used in its narration, that the reader, who cares to interest himself in this history, will no doubt become quite well acquainted with Professor Paul as I was myself.

These notes have been in my possession now for nearly seven years, and during that time they have been read and handled so repeatedly by my friends, that when I came to transcribe them I found that in places the writing was completely obliterated. Whenever this was the case, however, I did not hesitate to draw upon my memory to supply the missing part, as I always found it was very clear and decided; but I have never resorted to this expedient unless it was absolutely necessary to do so in order to render the story intelligible.

This has not occurred except at very rare intervals, and the reader may safely rely upon the accuracy of this transcription. Indeed I may add that after it was completed, it was carefully compared with the original notes, and was found to be correct in every particular, with the exception of the few passages to which I have already alluded.

The reader will also find, related at the end of these notes, a brief account of some events in the life of Professor Paul, which afterwards came under my personal observation, and which I have thought it would be unwise to separate them.

I am unable now after so great a lapse of time, to recollect how it was that Professor Paul came to the notice of the person to whom he should relate his history, but after reading the first few passages of my notes I find that it was evidently at his request that I first began to listen to him.

The notes begin as follows:

I went down to see Professor Paul the next evening as I had promised. He had requested me to lay aside all ceremony, and come at once upon my arrival into the little room behind the shop, and I accordingly did.

I found a bright coal fire burning cheerfully in the grate, and there it, in a large armchair, sat the old man apparently in deep meditation. He was seemingly engrossed with his thoughts, that he did not notice my entrance, and continued still to sit in silence, so without waiting longer I drew a chair up to the fire and sat myself down.

It was some time after this, that awakening from his reverie, he turned to me, his eyes in my direction and for the first time became aware of my presence. He looked at me for a moment with a somewhat questioning glance, and then as if reflecting something said slowly:

"Ah, yes, now I remember. It is very good of you to come, my friend. I am afraid you will find my history very uninteresting, but that at last has become necessary that I should relate it to some one, and as you were a brother artist I somehow thought you would be the most likely to give me a patient hearing. I will try and make it as brief as I can, and as there remains a considerable time before the day upon which it must be finished, I will be careful to distribute it over as many evenings as possible, that you may not become too fatigued at any one time."

When he had said this he slowly settled himself back in his chair and continued:

"My friend, before I tell you any part of my life's story, you must first promise me that you will keep it a close secret within your soul, until after the time of my death."

"On your honor as a brother artist you will not let a word of it be known to any living person until such time as I have passed away."

"Yes," I said, "I promise it, Professor Paul, and if I promise I will surely keep my word."

He seemed satisfied, but added, "It will not be anything that you would care to tell in any way, and my asking to be kept a secret is only a whim, the result of a mere fancy. I have always been afraid that if it were known perhaps people would stare at me, and I wouldn't like that. I dread it. But my history will be safe in your keeping, my friend; I feel sure it will; and beside there is a reason I am obliged to tell, but this you need not know until the time is complete."

I had no idea then to what he referred. I could tell from the dreamy look in his eyes, that his mind was ranging over a long period of years, at least something in his look gave me that impression, and when he next spoke it was confirmed.

"If I am not resting to you my history because I find a pleasure in dwelling upon the sad events which it chronicles, but rather because, to aid the purpose I have in view, it is necessary that you should know it. Ah, no, my friend, I would willingly give one half of the years which may remain to me, if by so doing I might but win an equal portion of the past, but this is not given man to do. Memory is eternal, and on its undying page my history is forever written."

"I do not wish to weary you, my friend, by telling you aught of my life save that you must know, and for this reason I will be brief."

"I was an orphan and lived with my aunt, except when away at college, until I had passed my twentieth birthday."

"Her home was in Seaton village, and there I spent the only happy years I had known. I had ever known. It was a quaint old-fashioned little place, lying just far enough from the great London to have an easy access to its luxuries, and remain unspoiled by its vices. There it was I first learned to know and love the pure face of nature, and from the germs of that affection sprang my other love for that great art which is nature's second self."

"I determined to become a painter. I remember well, my friend, that even as a child, when I lay sick, my aunt could find nothing that would so well amuse me as some paper and a piece of charcoal. I think I always loved art. I have many times spent the whole day wandering over the beautiful stretch of country that surrounded the village without once returning to my aunt's house until warned to do so by the approach of night. Indeed, I have at times spent the night as well as the day in the fields, that I might more easily watch the delicate shadows cast upon the grass by the moonlight falling through the trees."

FUN, FACTS AND FICTION

A Judicious Compound of Wit and Wisdom.

The great majority of so-called cough cures do little more than impair the digestive functions and create biliousness. On the contrary, while it cures the cough, does not interfere with the functions of either stomach or liver.

She—How shiny the rain makes everything look, doesn't it? He—Yes, everything looks very shiny.

Carter's Little Liver Pills must not be confused with common Cathartic or Purgative pills, as they are entirely without effect on the bowels. One trial will prove their superiority.

"Do you want the earth?" inquired the haughty hotel clerk of a meekly-complaining guest. "No," was the reply, "you can keep it awhile longer until I ask you for it."

Peccoliarities of the Hair. There are times when all persons require to pay some particular attention to the hair. To rekindle the life and energy of the roots is a simple matter. It can be done. Dr. Dorend's Great German Hair Magic will do the work. It works in accordance with nature, supplies fresh nutriment to the glands, keeps the hair luxuriant and natural in shade. Be sure to get it. It is money well spent. Every druggist sells it. It is money well spent. See Dorend's advertisement in another column.

Where are you going, my lusty man. With the bucket of chalk and the big tin can. Down the path that leads to the brook-sweep glider.

"I'm going a-milking, sir," he said. A man's wife should always be the same especially to her husband, but if she is weak and nervous and uses Carter's Little Liver Pills she cannot be, for they will make her "feel like a different person," at least so they all say, and their husbands say so, too.

"I fancy I've seen that face before." "Yes, that's the way I wear it."

A Dinner Pill.—Many persons suffer excruciating agony after partaking of a hearty dinner. The food partaken of is like a ball of lead upon the stomach, and instead of a healthy nutriment, it becomes a poison to the system. Dr. Farnes's Vegetable Pills are wonderful correctives of such troubles. They correct acidity, open the secretions and convert the food partaken of into healthy nutriment. They are just the medicine to take if troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia.

"Now, that's what I like to see," observed the visiting merchant to the proprietor of the great dry-goods emporium, "all the clerks full of vim and energy." "Yes," assented the proprietor, "we close early to-day, and they are all getting ready to go home."

SHILOH'S CATARRH REMEDY.—A positive cure for Catarrh, Dysuria, and Cancer Mouth. W. T. Strong, 184 Dundas street, London.

An article going the rounds of the press speaks of "Superstitions About Babies." This is wrong. There are no superstitions about babies. Of all the hard, practical, scientific, mental, mechanical, matter-of-fact, artificial creatures in this world, commend us to a baby. It only believes in itself.

VOICES OF THE PEOPLE.

READERS OF THE ADVERTISER.—Let us hear from you on all questions affecting the public. Make your communications brief and send your name as a guarantee of good faith.

Sabbath Observance.

To the Editor of the ADVERTISER:—I notice in your issue of the 17th inst., under the heading of "Voices of the People—Religious Liberty," I notice a strange conglomeration of ideas, as to petitioning Parliament to pass the bill for the better observance of the Sabbath. The writer should remember that this beautiful world of ours is not made up of Christians. Supposing there was no law against murder, theft, arson, and a number of sins, imagine the state of affairs, the tables of stone commandments against committing these sins as well as the one against breaking the Sabbath. When will woman's suffrage be the order of the day? Paris Station, Feb. 22. E. J. T.

Ditches and Water Courses.

To the Editor of the ADVERTISER:—I notice in your last week's paper the remarks of an aggrieved person on the Ditches and Water Course Act of 1883. You answered his questions correctly—that is, to appeal to the county judge, who is to settle disputes according to the evidence. You should have told him that the evidence would have to be professional evidence, as the evidence of half of the farmers of a township would not break the evidence of an engineer. Those are the words used by a judge on one case of an appeal under the Ditches and Water Course Act of 1883. Now, sir, do you think there is any justice in that? I think there are numbers of farmers just as well qualified and better to make as just an award as far as each individual is concerned as the professional engineer. I do not mean to say that they are capable of taking the levels, as there are very few of them that would be qualified to do it, still there are some that can come pretty close to it. Now, I do think the act requires some amendments. For instance, the engineer has too much power in one way and not enough in another. He should have the power to go further than 50 rods above where he commenced the drain and to take in all lands each side that is benefited by the drain and make each lot pay according to the number of acres benefited. These are powers he should have and be made to use. No engineer should have the power to make an award that one man should be made dig and maintain an open drain on another man's farm, for if they are ever so good friends at the time the friendship will not last long. Every farmer should be made maintain all drains on his own farm, that is, if they have to be open drains. Then he will be more careful how he turns hogs and cattle in them unless it could be plainly shown that the drain would benefit to his farm. Such cases would be very rare ones, as it is admitted by able writers that the high lands require draining so I contented that a lot is benefited by a covered drain running through it.

Now, Mr. Editor, I would like to see the suggestions I have made discussed through the ADVERTISER, more especially the compelling one man to maintain and open drain on another's farm. I think the duties of the engineer should cease after taking the levels, and the award be made by disinterested farmers, as they should be fully better than the professional engineer the benefits of a drain, as it is the practical experience that teaches. Now very few of these engineers have that, consequently some of them make some stupid blundering.

LOOKER-ON.

Better Times for Farmers.

To the Editor of the ADVERTISER:—I notice a letter from "Observing Farmer" of Jan. 30 holding out great hopes of a better day dawning on the farmers of Ontario. I am sure from six years' residence and daily observation, the realization of such hopes would be hailed with pleasure by many of the now suffering farmers of Ontario. I agree with you that what your correspondent says respecting the benefits of free trade, but I do not believe in "bolstering up Ontario to the disparement of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories. Any man who gives himself credit for, he would know that facts point to the contrary. There are no industrious and steady farmers out here to-day who have lived in Ontario that would ever think of returning to Ontario. Here we have the finest climate with the richest land, producing the best grain and grass in abundance, from which we have the best of milk and butter, as well as the best of meat and fowl. Here we can handle our sheaves without fear of being lacerated with Canada thistles, we can properly carry them to our bare arms, if need be, without having to lift them with gloves or at the end of a pitch fork, and potato crops are not eaten up by the Colorado beetle (commonly called the potato bug in Ontario), but on the contrary are noted for their luxuriant foliage, while the fine taters when cooked are as white as snow and light as flour. Your correspondent says many who came out to this country with glowing expectations would return if they had the means. I could tell him of several not far from London, Ont., who are earnest, persevering, steady men, who would gladly come out here if they had the means, men who have stood on London market and been compelled to sell their produce at prices in our own bare arms, to say nothing of rent and taxes. These men have hoped against hope, but hope long deferred makes the heart sick; so many of those who are now sick at the prospects of Ontario will find the means somewhere or other to move West, where, I trust like, myself, they will not be disappointed. I admit there are many good practical farmers in Ontario as well as some poor ones here, but that proves nothing either for or against the capabilities of the land, but many of the farms in Ontario are worn out, especially in the case of rented farms, where all is taken out and as little put in the land as possible. The consequence is, many of these farms are overrun with weeds and will take years of good management to bring them back to their normal condition. Thanking you for space in your valuable daily issue, for which I am still a subscriber. Yours respectfully,
