ST. ANDREW'S IS THE PARENT OF CITY PRESBYTERIANISM

Missions at Home and Abroad
Prospered Under Early Zeal Here.

STATELY EDIFICE

Rev. John Scott, Pioneer Pastor, Lays Cornerstone of Building.

Distinct on the skyline of London as one approaches it from the north, south or west, is the tall spire of St. Andrew's Presbyterian church, rearing itself erect and heavenward over any other building in London. It has the tall serenity of a parent church watching over those of its offspring, one in almost every district of the city, to cluster to itself the followers of the Presbyterian faith.

For from St. Andrew's church have sprung the greater number of the Presbyterian congregations in the city. As need arose, the congregation of St. Andrew's, equally alive to the requirements of the mission fields both abroad and at home, were ready either to take the forward step themselves or to assist small groups of Presbyterians who in their various districts had commenced to feel the necessity of a new branch of their denomination. In 1884, when a Sabbath school originated by the congregation of St. Andrew's in a small room on the Hamilton road has assumed the present day proportions of King Street Presbyterian church; Knox Presbyterian church is the result of a Sunday school commenced in South London; St. Paul's, West London, and St. George's, East London, were originally missions of St. Andrew's church, and a mission opened on Oxford street in 1888 was subsequently incorporated with St. James' church, when the latter moved from Richmond street to its present location on St. James.

Lays Cornerstone.
Rev. John Scott, an early pastor of St. Andrew's church, who laid the cornerstone of the present magnificent building placed in the cavity of a small inn house containing among other things a sketch of the congregation from the time of its earliest beginning in 1832. At that time the inhabitants who regarded themselves as belonging to the church of Scotland, began to quote the words of the pastor, "to receive public preaching of the gospel as a distinct congregation."
In the same year, a pioneer missionary who was visiting in London preached to the little band. For nine years services were held in the various public buildings, which proved available until in 1842, when the congregation was formally organized, and a government grant of £1000 was obtained, of which the present property is a part.

St. Andrew's, in the early days, was truly a home for the Scottish of London's population. For it had not only a church proper, but a Gaelic church as well, a frame building on a spot where afterward the home of Dr. H. A. MacCallum stood. The old frame building was subsequently moved to the east side of Waterloo street, between Queen's and Dundas streets, to do duty as a residence.

Beauty
A Gleamy Mass of Hair
35c "Danderine" does Wonders
for Any Girl's Hair

Girls! Try this! When combing and dressing your hair, just moisten your hair brush with a little "Danderine" and brush it through your hair. The effect is startling! You can do your hair up immediately and it will appear twice as thick and heavy—no mass of gleamy hair, sparkling with oil and dandruff disappears. Get a bottle of delightful, refreshing "Danderine" at any drug or toilet counter and just see how healthy and youthful your hair becomes.—Adv.

Unless you ask for "Phillips" you may not get the original Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 20 years. Protect your doctor and yourself by avoiding imitations of the genuine "Phillips."
Large 50-cent bottles contain directions—any drug store.—Adv.

FRIENDS OF LABOR WOULD DROP PACT

Russian Treaty Is Not Good Election Issue, Says Paper.

Associated Press Despatch
London, Oct. 3.—Rumors of every kind are rife concerning a possible political crisis, but nothing definite is developing. Premier MacDonald has gone to Chequers Court for a few days' rest. He will return Monday for a cabinet council which, it is expected, will decide on the government's policy. Meantime all three parties are busy preparing the party machinery for eventualities, and are generally engaged in what is known as "manoeuvring for position."

The New Statesman, which although not a government organ, represents Labor's attitude, strongly urges Premier MacDonald against resignation or dissolution, either on the question of the Russian treaty, or because of the Workers' Weekly case.

The Workers' Weekly case, it says, is too insignificant an issue, although the Russian treaty is not a good issue on which to fight an election. "It is perfectly clear," the Statesman adds, "that there is an overwhelming majority both in parliament and the country against subsidizing the government out of the pockets of the British taxpayers. There is no sense in pressing the policy, and Mr. MacDonald would be well advised in declining to submit the Russian treaty to parliament for ratification and resuming negotiations with the Russian delegates in order to get a more acceptable agreement."

British American Oil Company Explains Prices of Gasoline To Canadian Consumers

Commenting on the gasoline situation and the two recent declines in price, Mr. S. R. Parsons, president of the British American Oil Company, said that owing to a decline in price of crude oil announced a day or two ago, and particularly the reductions put into effect on Oct. 1 in the price of gasoline by the leading oil companies of the United States, the Canadian refiners have followed their usual practice of bringing the prices in Canada into line as far as possible. When the situation has been further revealed there may be other reductions in Canada.

There has been a disjointed and demoralized condition in the oil refining industry in the United States in 1923 and 1924. This has been brought about through excess production of crude oil. In consequence many refineries have failed; strong companies have passed their dividends; and others are hanging on by picking up "bootleg" crude, out of which they manufacture what has come to be known as "distress" gasoline. These conditions have made it extremely difficult for Canadian refiners to compete with products of their own manufacture except at a loss, as the tariff protection is only one cent per gallon or about four per cent on wholesale prices. In the face of such abnormal competition and breakdown conditions Canadian refiners have considered their duty to their employees, their shareholders, and the public at large, and have carried on as usual. Canadian refiners are doing their utmost to meet these adverse conditions and carry on their businesses at the smallest possible margin of actual net profit that will enable them to operate. It is surely not in Canadian interests that the refiners of Canada, with their ten to fifteen thousand employees, their widespread interests, and share in national, municipal, and other taxation burdens, should have to do business at a loss.

Crude oil (out of which is manufactured gasoline, benzene, kerosene, lubricating oils, fuel oil, paraffine wax, petroleum, coke, etc.) is sold at the regular "posted" price from time to time like wheat, and is subject to change according to the law of supply and demand. Unfortunately, Canada does not produce enough crude oil to keep the refineries going one week out of the entire year. Refiners are, therefore, compelled to purchase their supplies in the United States and other countries of the world. Refiners usually make yearly supply contracts, in order to safeguard their interests, at the regular posted price plus premiums for quality and expense of gathering by pipeline from the fields, as well as in many cases loading same into tank cars. When there is excess production, caused generally by the opening up of new and prolific fields, refiners in the immediate vicinity of such production who are not under contract are able to pick up crude oil at their own prices; hence they are able to undersell others in putting out their finished products, and this state of thing usually ends in price wars and unstable markets as at present.

Some Canadian refiners are compelled to import more or less finished gasoline to meet the demand for this product, as if they distilled a sufficient quantity at their refineries they would have to manufacture out of the same crude oil, at the same time, excess quantities of other products which they could not find a market for in Canada. In order that such gasoline may be marketed along with their own refinery products, the delivery costs, overhead, and other items have to be provided for. In the past it has occurred that the laid down wholesale cost of imported gasoline did not show a margin of one-half cent per gallon under the regular Canadian market price, so that the refiners had to sell same at a very heavy loss considering delivery charges and overhead. This condition has not prevailed recently owing to the deplorable unsettledness already referred to, but may come again at any time.

Price declines, even if comparatively small, of crude oil and products mean enormous losses at refineries and branches where large stocks always have to be carried and bought at higher figures. Gasoline is one of the very few products that is selling in Canada at or a little below 1913 prices, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Canadian refiners carry stocks at about two thousand different points in Canada where they have storage facilities in order to meet the needs of service stations, garages, and retail merchants. The great majority of these stations owing to Canadian climatic conditions are conducted at a considerable actual loss for many months of the year in order to take care of the few winter customers and keep up their necessary organizations; for instance, business in February is only twenty-five per cent of August's trade.

Canadian refiners suffer a severe handicap in the matter of taxation. Outside of greatly increased municipal taxation on their refineries and branches throughout the entire Dominion, the government taxes in forms not in existence prior to 1914 amount to about ten per cent of their entire capital.

I may add that, quite contrary to many foolish and unwarranted statements, the records of my company show that last year we made a profit much less than one cent per gallon on all the gasoline that we marketed.—Adv.
