Fear of Canadian Redskins Planted In Tourist's Mind

Canadian Press Despatch.

Montreal, July 31 .- "Where do we meet the Indians, and are they very wild, please?" inquired a young female tourist of a Montreal hotel clerk today. She was a member of a party from Springfield, Mass., and was under the illusion that Montreal citizens lived in terror of the redskins. Seeing she was in earnest, the clerk questioned her and discovered that her state of mind was due to a letter from a cousin in Fort William who had written: "We have trouble with the Indians here, who steal our fowls and occasionally use the back acres for their tribal dances. They look very fierce and wild, but if you talk to them soothingly they seldom hurt you. They are worse nearer Montreal, so look out when you go there on your vacation." The lady, let it be added, is a teacher in one of Massachusetts' public schools.
