r the d his In a efti-, unale of fome but if then

th reld, in e doe not s uth all made the ) alrae to ft us nccanh of una country does not confift in the quantity of gold and filver it contains, but in the number and induftry of its inhabitants; and a fingle prowince that maintains ten thousand industrious and dutiful fubjects, is of more confequence to the government, to which it belongs, than all the money in the world together.

It is not to be fuppofed, that our author, after having been at fo much pains to depreciate our conquefts, will have any great difficulty in concluding a peace with France, which he feems inclined to make almost upon any terms. He would have us to reftore----but does not chuse to descend to particulars; though he feems ftrongly to infinuate, that we ought to reftore Senegal and Goree, because, " he doubts whether " Great Britain hitherto has found those " acquifitions to be of fo great advantage " as they were given out to be to our " intereft and commerce; whether they F 2 " are