GERMANS CAUGHT IN GAS EXPLOSION

Heavy Explosion Occurred During French Attack on Teutons' Position.

ENEMY LOSS TERRIFIC

Successful Stroke of Allies.

chiefs of battalions were killed, the German offensive was completely checked.

"But this was not sufficient, and we began the task of clearing the right bank. Our attack lasted until the 17th of May, first on the two wings—on the right toward Hetsen, on the left towards Lizerne and Steenstrate.

"Lizerne was first conquered. We continued to progress. It remained for us to take for the enemy, the quadrilateral which they still held between Steenstrate and Hetsen.

Enemy Severely Tried.
"In these actions the enemy were severely tried. He left over 1000 dead and wounded on the field, and we had already captured many men and much material. The position which we now wanted to gain was a particularly difficult one, on a low plain of flanders.

There the Germans had succeeded in installing themselves strongly; first, to assure their communications, they increased their facilities for crossing the canal and doubled their lines of trenches. Finally, there was a third line of these defenses along the left bank of the canal, abundantly protected by earth sacks and obstacles. Marshes and numerous large holes filled with water added to the difficulties.

"The capture of so strong a position required work of preparation. On May 14 we tried to rush things, but failed.
Fog, asphyxiating gas and quick fires stopped us.

Began Preparations.
"The 'Maison du College' (so named because a German major had installed there, in the face of a French major, his post of command) is a farm well protected by deep water. The men in the trenches, the college moved down our lines and many brave men succeeded in it then became necessary to increase our trenches, and our works generally, and also to strengthen our investment, particularly on the two wings. We began sapping and accumulating our artillery of the Belgians. The spectacle in the vicinity of Steenstrate and the village itself was frightful. The Germans left over 600 dead. Our losses were serious, but less than those of the enemy.

Meanwhile another attack had occurred on the Hetsen-Maison du Collegue front, where at nightfall the Zouaves were in possession of three lines of the enemy's trenches and all the houses of Hetsen, on the right bank of the canal.

Our progress continued toward the north along the canal and we also surrounded the advance works of the Maison du College. In the trenches the number of German bodies exceeded 700. On May 17 our troops entered the Maison du College and there were no more enemy troops on the right bank of the canal. The counter-attacks on the day before were made to cover their retreat. In our attack on the Maison du College a heavy explosion occurred and a cloud of yellow smoke mounted sky-ward. It was evidently asphyxiating gas. Our Zouaves were happy, as it was believed the Germans had suffered from this effusion of gas."
