Surely we realize what technical edu cation can do and is doirg for the nations' commercial advancement: surely we are not deluding ourselves with the idea that our untrained in-telligence is equal, or more than equation to the intelligence of other peoples plus science and cultivation and fur-seeing methods of working it to the best uses. Mr. Ross greatly vaunts the Ontario School system, but as our contemport ary points out, more might have been done for technical education. In his proposed appropriation for a conterr-cial agency in London he also showed that he was hardly great enough to grasp the importance of the situation. THE AVERAGE YOUNG MAN.
