The note justifies the Transvagl's control of the desert place to preach to one manhood. Always heed this precept, and "show thyself a man". Then love man and baptize him. In modern times and "show thyself a man." we had what were called "professional" evangelists. It looked like a bad sympathy with the unfortunate, the name, but God raised up evangelists. We thought of such men as the Weseys, Whitfield, Fletcher, Haldane and thers, and hoped that God would send more of them. The speaker was suspicious of evangelists who worked for money, who belittled the church of God, who counted numbers as all mportant and attributed all conversions to their work. Such men could not do their work without the pastors. He was thankful for the Moodys, Varleys, Munhalls, Chapmans and others. May the Lord use them more and more. Mr. Smith concluded with this personal reference: "Mr. Varley complained that the pastors were not with him. I was exceedingly sorry not to be able to attend any of the services of the past two weeks, but my hands were tied. I could not leave duties that had to be attended to. When I did hear two characteristics having entered inof Scripture, and while there were some things said I could not agree Thrift and industry were also neces-

Kings, "Show thyself a man." With nese words, said the preacher, King David exhorted his son Solomon to qualify himself for the duties and responsibilities of his destiny as successions. sor to the throne of Israel. There is a sense in which every man is a king. The kingdom he is to rule over is in himself, and his life, with its duties and responsibilities. To each and all of us today these words of Scripture may be addressed, and we are thus exhorted to be men; to do rightly. To define "true manhood," certain qualities were necessary, and these would be the subject of his theme. In the Rev. Ira Smith, of the Talbot Street | first place "truth." Without it ain could not hold her position and is essential. That quality that shows sick and afflicted, and the suffering, and one, too, which was associated with the order to which he spoke. Courage was a third quality. Bravery, he said, is a characteristic of true men. And, may I say this afternoon, that there is no nation on the earth that can furnish such a large roll of those who had displayed courage and bravery than Britain. The speaker then dwelt upon the character and abilities of Nelson, Wellington, and Lord Shaftesbury. manly man would be one who controls his appetites and passions. It was easy to talk of self-control, but a different matter to practice it. If they wished to show themselves men they should pray for strength to rule, and sway the scepter over themselves. Firmness and steadfastness were other qualities. It was these that had won Waterloo, and crushed Napoleon. These to the hearts of the British people, sary, and in this connection the preacher spoke of the army of men who are always looking for work and praying they won't find it. Obedience was indispensable in the true man. None of these qualities, he said, could be sustained in human strength, and he pointed them heavenward for assistance. Referring to Christian characters, he said: You know that durpassed away. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, and, without exception, the notices that have appeared in the press have been notices of praise. The purity of charcharacter-it is fair to hold up Mr. Gladstone a model before the eyes of the world. He stamped his character upon the whole nation. He was a man who believed his Bible, believed in prayer, recognized his Saviour and his willingness to strengthen. Mr. Moorhouse closed his sermon with a feeling reference to the excellent qualities of Queen Victoria as a woman, wife and mother, who is beloved and admired
