THE WORLD SERIES ROUND-UP.—NO. 2. THE TWO INFIELDS.

GANDIL VS. HOLKE.

Arnold C. Gandil, the White Sox first baseman, is a veteran. Which is to say that Chick has reached the advanced and tottering age of twenty-eight years. Twenty-eight years is not as old as the Pyramids. But it is a trifle older than Holke is, and all things in the game are comparative.

Gandil, compared to Holke, his Giant rival, is a veteran. He was with the White Sox seven years ago, has played with Washington and Cleveland since and is now back with the Sox again. It may be that some astute sightseer with an eagle-tinted orb can discern some keen difference in the comparative play of these two. We can't.

play of these two. We can't.

Gandil has had more experience, is a timely hitter and a dependable infielder. He is a first-class adjunct to any club, because he is always on the job.

Holke is much the same type. He has been outbatting Gandil by a fair margin, and is a steady, reliable first baseman. But he doesn't know quite as much about first base play, and in a big series this additional knowledge may come in tidily.

Both men are possessed with all the courage and coolness required to play their best under pressure. Neither belongs to the duck-fit or the temperamental class. They are not the two greatest first basemen that ever met in a championship, but they are world series types of more than normal value.

COLLINS VS. HERZOG.

If a list of five of the greatest second basemen of the last fifteen years had to be completed, two of the five would be Eddle Collins and Buck Herzog. The other three would be Nap Lajoie, Johnny Evers and Jack Barry.

There isn't any debate to be launched about Eddle Collins. For complete value on attack and defence he is the greatest second baseman in baseball's history.

If this comparison was an all-time affair, there would be no argument. But there are other intricate spots to be considered.

The Collins of Mackian days was a 340 batsman. The Collins of 1917 has To add to the complications of the case, Herzog has been in bad physical shape most of the year, has been forced to seek a rest, and while he will almost certainly be ready for the series, no one can say in just what shape he will represent for all of the series.

he will report for play.

Herzog last season gave one of the greatest exhibitions of second base play we have ever seen—an exhibition well upon a par with even Collins at But an early season injury removed a portion of his 1917 steadiness, giving his play an erratic tone.

If Herzog reports with all his pristine pep and fire he will be ready to If Herzog reports with all his pristine pep and life he will be ready to given Collins a fairly even fight. But even at his best the Giant infielder isn't as dangerous at bat as his Chicago rival.

Both men are fine base runners, both are eternally alert and both are more than likely to be at their best under the flare and frenzy of a champion-while Collins hasn't batted up to his average span, he is still one of the most dangerous athletes in the league for any pitcher to face, and he can still cover an abnormally large section of the playing field.

Collins sagged a bit in his last world series, back in 1914, but after the Brave avalanche struck the startled Mackmen a sagging movement was in order all along the line.

On a general average Collins has been at his best in the post-season scrimmages. On two occasions he has batted over 400. He has always fielded well. Herzog's last world's series affair, in 1°12, against the Red Sox, was an amazing combination. His batting and fielding were a series of scalp-lifting sensations.

But it is hardly reasonable to suppose that even with a full rest Herzog can regain his best physical condition and reach his best play. In this respect he is an uncertainty where Collins is a certainty. And unless Herzog is at his best the White Sox margin at second will be pronounced enough to give the Cook County battalion a decisive advantage.

Taking all details into consideration, the Sox have the better of the debate at second—only a slight advantage if Herzog is in shape, but a big advantage if he isn't.

just at present remains a guess.

Cash Pours in at White Sox Park for Big Series.

Chicago, Sept. 26.—Nearly $200,000 in cash and checks has been received to-day at Comiskey Park in payment for reservations for the first three games of the world's series, which opens on Saturday, October 6. Necessarily a large part of this sum must be returned, as it represents requests for close to 100,000 seats, while the capacity of the park is only 33,000.

Although elaborate plans have been announced to prevent world's series tickets from falling into the hands of scalpers, all the leading ticket brokers have hung up signs offering $2.50 for a $1.50 ticket and $7.50 for a $5 box seat.
