

Father Mullaney Prescribes Heroic Treatment for Fifteen-Year-Old Children Who Are Often Heard Boasting of "Keeping Com-pany."

Father Mullaney, one of the priests conducting an unnarried man's mission this week in the Church of Our Lady of Grace, in Hoboken, on Tuesday right delivered a sermon before a congregation of more than two thousand young men, and spoke plainly to them.

He said the married state was the them.

He said the married state was the safest for the young man who felt that he had not received a call from his Maker o enter a religious life. With all the temptations of today held out invitingly to the youth, he is safest when setled down.

"Permit me to say a word or two regarding company keeping," said the speaker. "It is positively ridiculous to hear a fifteen-year-old slip of a girl telling her friend that 'me and him is steadies." If I were the father of these 'steadies' I'd administer a good, sound thrashing to them. As a rule, about seventy-five per cent. of these fifteen-year-old boys who glory in the silly little compliments paid them by those as senseless as themselves, cannot support themselves, much less a wife. Imagine a home supported on from three to five dollars a week. Very often the girl who 'keeps company' with the five dollar a week sport will forget he is alive the moment he is unable to satisfy her deeire for soda and bonbons. Young men, don't be fools, Wait at least until you cut your wisdom teeth.

at least until you cut your wisdom teeth.

"I will also advise young men to observe this rule when keeping company; it is, in my opinion, most highly important. Never, if you can help it, delay marriage. A year's time ought to be the limit of company keeping. By delaying, you embarrass the young men keep company for mere pastime. These are a scourse to society. It very often happens that they deprive girls of making a good match if they had not been receiving the attentions of these social parasites.

"There is another rule that should be adhered to by self-respecting young men. Never call on a young woman and converse with her alone in her parlor, or whatever room you are invited into. To be strictly proper, the parent or guardian should always remain in the same room."

THE SKIPPER JACK

"I haven't seen it noticed," said a Toronto butcher the other day, "that nothing but good meat comes into Toronto either. There are no skipper jacks sent in at this time of the year." "Skipper Jack? What kind of an animal is that?"

And the butcher explained that a skipper jack was a beef that was made of the Pacific from England has provoked much press comment here, mostly sarcastic. The Globe says:

"This responsible politician does not apparently think it unworthy of himself or his position to tickle the ears of the groundlings in a speech full of menace to America's only friend among the powers. We are not greatly concerned either for the threat or for the crude vulgarity which causes Mr. Shaw to apply to a particular power. We have been threatened before through a thousand years of our history; and we have had many rivals who were, and are not.

"But what does impress us is the manner in which this absurd speech was received. Were an English minister of Mr. Shaw's position to make a similar allusion to any foreign power all the chancelories of Europe would be convulsed and explanations would be immediately demanded. Were the power in question the United States the American people would assuredly go fruntic. But because an American statesman displays ill breeding England heeds not a whit and the rest of the world shrugs its shoulders and talks about diplomacy in shirt sleeves."

NO HUMAN WEEDS

Dr. Savage Lauds the Generosity of the Poor—Springtime in Humanity.

The Rev. Dr. Minot J. Savage preached on "Spring in Nature and in Human Life," from the text Solomon fl., 11 to 13, at the Church of the Messiah, New York, last Sunday. in the course of his sermon he referred to the great bulk his sermon he referred to the great pair of the population, they who, from the point of view of the chosen few in the world's gardens and hothouses, are hu-man weeds, and lauded their generosity. He said in part:

There is just as much heart in the poor, uneducated, struggling mother as she gives her life watching over her babe as there is in the rich mansion on the avenue—sometimes more. There is as much heart in the father—and I have known a case like this within the last week—who literally works himself to death for the mother and the little ones, as there is in the man of wealth who surrounds those he loves with luxuries. Isn't there a little bit more?

We speak of the generosity of the rich—and they are very generous, more generous today than at any time in the history of the world. I recognize with admiration the man who gives his millions for education, for art, for the beautifying of life, for the uplifting of it in any direction; but I have learned that the poor are the generous givers of the world.

Carnegle and Rockefeller give their millions, but comparatively they give very little isdeed when placed side by side with the poor, who share their crusts, their last meals, with each other in their extremity. You go and study the poor and see how they watch over each other, loan each other from their little savings, contribute generously to the very last for the sake of helping one another.

There is not an essential human virtue that you do not find down among these human weeds, as we are superciliously apt to think them. Do not despise them. Respect the humanity and not the superficial distinctions, and do not despise them. Respect the humanity and not the superficial distinctions, and do not despise them. Graph of the same social grade, living in the same kind of house, surrounded substantially by the same class of books and papers, moving in the same society—and yet, what? One, out of this raw material of living, turns himself into a consecrated, devoted, loving, serving, helping man. Amother man takes these same raw materials of life and makes of himself, what? A grasping, selfish, close-fisted hard, unfeeling unneighborly kind of man.

One is a hopeful man, who sees good everywhere, wh

And we can begin now to sow seeds of gentleness, of love and truth, of charity, of peace, of goodness, of help and know that the great Husbandman will send His sun and His showers, and that we shall reap fruit to life eternal.

claims that it is because he is wise and sees things as they are, that he is thus hopeless.

What does this mean? It means that we carry in ourselves in very large measure responsibility for our point of view, our outlook for what we make ourselves, for what we are. Plants, slowers and trees cannot help themselves. We can; we can look up, we can look up, we can look orward, we can determine as to whether we will let the conditions of life crush us or whether we will master them and weld them into material for hope and cheer and service.

Again, we are apt when we come in contact with people to judge them by some absolute standard, and one generally which we furnish ourselves. If they do not come up to our idea of what they ought to be, then it is all wrong. Yet, possibly, they haven't had the opportunity. Take a little bey, for example, who grows up in the simus of this city. He is preyed upon from the time he is able to walk by some absolute standard, and one mand the learnest to be sharp on his own account—a little sharper than he, until he learnest to be sharp on his own account—a little sharper than he, until he learnest to be sharp on the svenue, or in one of our sweet and tender homes?

But in unfortunate environment of some work and the special or the first and the ordered Mr. Silver is the most of the plant and lon hunting. There is quite a scarcity of oats in this vicinity and those having them find no difficulty in getting 50 cents a bushel. The pressed hay market is still flat. Fresh eggs are plentiful and the merchants are paying 10 cents a dozen for them. Dairy butter in rolls brings 15 cents the pound if it is really good. There seems to be a lot of carelessness in the making of butter and not half of what comes is really first class. The makers of poor butter had better sell their butter fat to the creameries. PICTURE APPEARS ON CHURCH.

Likeness of St. John Visible on Facade of a Trenton Edifice That Once Bore His Name.

of a Trenton Edifice That Once Bore His Name.

TRENTON, N. J., May 1.—What appears to be a well-defined likeness of St. John has appeared on the front of the Catholic church of the Sacred Heart in South Trenton. The features are plainly those of the most generally accepted painting of St. John. The picture is above the main entrance, and its appearance has created a big flurry in Catholic circles in the neighborhood. The church is one of the largest in the city and has the largest congregation. Several years ago there was a bitter fight in the congregation. It had been known as St. John's church from its inception, but this name was changed to Sacred Heart. Many of the congregation protested, but were not able to alter the determination to change the name. Six years ago, just after this trouble Mgr. Satolli, then papal delegate to the United States, visited the church, and before that event the whole building was renovated and painted. Since then no one has been in a position to reach the spot where the picture appears. To do so would necessitate the rigging of scaffolding.

The priests connected with the church disclaim all knowledge of how the likness came to be where it is. It was not discovered until Sunday morning and the congregation is largely given to the belief that the picture was miraculous in its origin. One of the priests advanced the theory that some of the men employed to paint the church were sympathizers with the faction which favored the retention of the old name and that one of them having considerable skill with the brush traced the likeness of the saint in a paint of different composition to that used for the body of the church, and then painted it over with the body paint. Naturally in the course of years the climate oaused changes in the pietter weather-resisting composition to petter weather-resisting composition to make the resisting composition to that used for the body of the church and the body paint has faded and paint.

There has been a crowd about the church all day and there is still one. The priests are constantly watching the facade and will make an investigation. The priest who advanced the material reason for the picture thinks the painter planned that the picture should show within a year or so.
