PENSIONS FOR TEACHERS.

A Nova Scotia school teacher has prepared a plan for the establishment of a pension system for retired and disabled teachers which has been approved by the members of the profession throughout the province and is now being considered by the Halifax School Board. The proposed system is based in part on the methods that underlie mutual benefit societies, though the teachers themselves are not required to furnish the whole beneficiary fund. It is proposed that teachers whose salaries are $400 or less shall contribute 2 per cent. of their salaries; those receiving between $400 and $800, 3 per cent., and those over $800, 4 per cent. To this is to be added an annual grant approximating the total amount contributed by the prospective beneficiaries. This is to be the foundation of a fund to be distributed to teachers forced by age or ill-health to retire after long service, in proportion to the salaries received during the last five years of their work and not to exceed the half of that average salary.

On the surface the plan seems feasible, especially since it is acceptable to those most concerned. Certainly something of the kind is needed, not only in Nova Scotia but in every province in Canada. With the single exception of good homes nothing is more essential to the welfare of the state than good school teachers and nothing is more certain than that under existing salary conditions the quality of the teaching class is bound to decrease.

For men, especially, the rewards are ridiculously inadequate to the value of service rendered, especially when considered in comparison with what a capable man may attain in other professions with no great ability nor effort.

Not only are larger salaries urgently needed to draw into the profession men and women of the calibre required, but something of the nature of this pension system should be provided to keep them there. A teacher increases in value with every year of experience. Under present conditions, when few receive enough to enable them to provide for the inevitable rainy day, and there is nothing save the loss of position awaiting them when their usefulness has passed, not many remain in the profession as long as the interests of society ask. The prospect of a comfortable pension at the end of the working days would undoubtedly tend to increase the length of the average teaching service and would, in this way, return the community good value for the money which such a system would cost.

An exchange, appropriately but rather unkindly at the time printed, following extract from a speech made by Sir William Mulock while in opposition: "To regard Parliament as presently a stepping-stone to office is calculated, in my judgment, to lower the dignity of Parliament. I do not deny that members of Parliament, after the lapse of a proper period of time, may have an equal claim with others to public office; but it will be a deplorable state of affairs if the idea comes to prevail that the best way to secure public office is to be a candidate for Parliament or a member of Parliament. Men will come here, not to serve their country generally, but the Government of the day, in order that they themselves may profit, and the interests of their constituents will only take a very secondary position."

CARNEGIE AND PEACE.

Andrew Carnegie proclaims that he has discovered a way to end all war.
If five or even three nations, he declares, would bind themselves together in bonds of permanent peace and arrange to themselves the authority to prevent all others from fighting, the age when war shall be no more would arrive and continue.

The plan is a good one, for it has been advocated by this paper more than once. We noticed no great upheaval of international acquiescence follow this advocacy at the time, but if Mr. Carnegie be more successful in arousing the interest of kings and parliaments we will hold no envy.

If the action and co-operative interest of the leading powers can be awakened the leading difficulty in the way of an alliance that would ensure permanent peace would undoubtedly be removed. It is self-evident, so much so that it seems absurd for any one man to claim the honor of evolving the scheme, that if Britain and France and the United States for instance were to bind themselves to submit all their differences to the Hague Tribunal or a similarly constituted international court, and to use their combined force to induce all other nations to adopt a similar policy, there would be no armed contests between any of the powers so long as that alliance lasted. And if such an alliance were once formed the chances are that it would be lasting.
Disarmament would not immediately follow, but as soon as the co-operation of all nations of dangerous strength was secured it would undoubtedly begin and, once begun, the nations felt the lifting of the burden of militarism.

Mr. Carnegie's address was devoted entirely to the desirability, necessity and even the possibility of putting an end to war.

the progress would be rapid.
Mr. Carnegie seems to think that if the allied powers would simply boycott any who refused to join them or who, having joined, violated the agreement, nothing more would be necessary to maintain international peace. The permanence of such a union, however, would be more thoroughly guaranteed by the existence of the nucleus of a sort of international army, organized by military police force and the agreement by the contracting powers to jointly contribute men and money enough to quell any possible disturbance.

But, though the scheme seems feasible were the first step undertaken, and the end is so greatly to be desired, there is that first step. And there is little prospect, even with Carnegie showing behind, of that step being taken for a long time yet.

MR. TARTE'S THOUGHTS ON SIR WILLIAM MULOCK.

After all is said and done, Mr. Tarte, who has been in the cabinet with Sir William Mulock, is not satisfied with the statement of his reasons for retiring from the cabinet. "It is always very difficult," says Mr. Tarte, "for those who are not thoroughly posted in the political situation to understand the true reasons why a minister gives up his seat in the cabinet." Three-quarters, and part of the time "half the other quarter of the official and public reasons are only for the purpose of deception. In politics and in diplomacy the truth comes out very late. It is certain that Sir William Mulock had not twelve months ago the least intention of leaving the government. On the other hand, Sir William is impulsive and impetuous, and contradiction annoys and irritates him. Fatigue growing out of his long years of labor may have led him to a sudden resolution to mount the bench, without a disagreement with his colleagues. The nationalization of telegraphs and telephones in the face of the resistance obtained by the Intercolonial, are sufficient to "make Sir William Mulock and his colleagues reflect." Sun.

CONTRASTS.

I see the tall church steeples, They reach so far, so far; But the eyes of my heart see the world's great mart Where the starving people are.

I hear the church bells ringing Their chimes on the morning air; But my soul's sad ear is hurt to hear The poor man's cry of despair.

Thicker and thicker the churches, Nearer and nearer the sky; But alack for their creeds while the poor man's needs Grow deeper as years roll by.

CARNEGIE HAS PLAN TO END ALL WAR

If Britain, France and United States Combine They Could Bring About Universal Peace

LONDON, Oct. 17.—"Five nations, and three banded together in a league of peace and inviting all other nations to join them could banish all war in the future." This opinion was expressed today by Andrew Carnegie in his address to the students of the University of St. Andrew, Scotland, in outlining the plan for the league for peace, Mr. Carnegie said:
"If the principal European nations were not free, through conscription, from the problem which now disturbs the military authorities of Britain, we should soon have the demands for them of a league of peace among the nations."
"Five nations co-operated in quelling the recent Chinese disorders and recu-sating their representatives in peril. It is perfectly clear that these five nations could banish war. Suppose even three of them formed a league of peace inviting all other nations to join and agreed that since war in any part of the civilized world affects all nations, and often seriously, no nation shall go to war, but shall refer international disputes to the Hague Conference or other arbitration bureau for peaceful settlement. The league agreement to declare non-intercourse with any nation refusing compliance."
"Imagine a man cut off today from the world. The league also might reserve to itself the right where non-intercourse is in fact or has been declared to prevent war, to use the necessary force to maintain peace, each member of the league agreeing to provide the needed force or money in lieu thereof in proportion to her population or wealth."
"The emperor of Russia called the Hague Conference, which gave us the international tribunal. Were King Edward or the emperor of Germany or the president of France acting for their governments to invite the nations or send their representatives to consider the wisdom of forming such a league the invitation would no doubt be responded to and probably prove successful."
"The number that would gladly join such a league would be great, for the small nations would leap to the opportunity."
"The relations between Britain, France and the United States today are so close, their arms so similar, their territories and fields of operation so clearly defined and so different that these powers might properly unite inviting other nations to consider the question of such a league as has been sketched."
"It is a subject well worthy the attention of rulers, for of all the modes of hastening the end of war this appears to be the easiest and the best. We have no reasonable doubt that arbitration in its present optional form will continue its rapid progress and that it in itself contains the elements required finally to lead us to peace, for it conquers wherever it is tried, but it is none the less gratifying to know there is in reserve a drastic mode of enforcement, if needed, which would promptly banish war."
Mr. Carnegie's address was devoted
end to war.

DEATHS.

WILLIAM AL BELLEAU, on the 17th inst. after an illness of eight weeks, Della, eldest daughter of Abraham and Lucy Willard, in the eighty year of her age. Cause of death, worm fever and pleurisy.
Funeral services conducted by Rev.
S. J. Perry assisted by Rev. G. Swinton and T. A. Leonard.

HARD LUCK.
(Harpers Weekly.)
Two Irishmen, employed in the building of a skyscraper in lower New York, were rival strong men, and seized every chance to prove superiority in physical prowess. There was a difference of opinion among their fellow laborers as to which was the stronger of the two, and after much discussion Riley believed that the contest should be held on the sixth story of the building.
The bet was accepted, and in the presence of an excited crowd, Riley began his laborious task. He ascended the ladder safely until he reached the fifth story, when, the consternation of the spectators, he was seen to stagger, almost dropping his burden. By a great effort, however, he recovered himself, and finally deposited McGinnis on the sixth floor.
"I've done it, McGinnis!" he exclaimed, triumphantly.
"That yes did, Riley," answered Mc-Ginnis, in a disappointed voice; "but I had great hopes when 'yes' stumbled at the fifth story."

DIAMOND ADVICE.
PUT YOUR MONEY INTO DIAMONDS.
Diamonds in your possession represent money--more money than you pay for them after you have worn them a while, for the advance in price is positively no danger of diamonds depreciating in value in our time. Of course it is always necessary to choose wisely and pay the right prices when you make your selection; therefore it is essential that you should choose the gems at a responsible house and I have a record and a reputation I think enviable, and my very large stock of set and unset gems allows for the best selection in this city or province.
Respectfully yours
