MACHINE OIL!

At any rate, a reporter in one of the Boston newspapers begins his story as follows: "The fire epidemic broke out again last evening, in rather a mild form." "Fire epidemic" is good, the resemblance between a house on fire and the measles being particularly striking. At any rate there is enough inflammation in both to justify the reporter's indulgence in metaphor. He might have gone worse; he might have said: "Once more the blazing epizootic is upon us"—but he nobly restrained himself.
