Bolshevism is a real menace to any nation that has not experienced it once" he said with much earnestness. "It panders to cupidity and does nothing to encourage a decent standard of living. I have seen it, and I cannot speak too strongly against it." He also expressed the opinion that the doctrines of Lenine and Trotzky were making considerable headway in Norway. Other European nations, too, are feeling the effect. "You on this continent do not realize what it means," he continued. "Bolshevism is certainly a great menace to the world, and the sooner this is realized the better it will be for civilization." Sir Ernest Shackleton but recently arrived from England on the Aquitania. He landed at New York and spent last week at Montreal.
