THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 1919

Nobody now seems to have the slightest hope of the licensed bar coming back again. The only hope left the thirty ones is that there will be wine and beer permits.

The farming community is recognizing more and more the value of advertising. In addition to getting out bills for auction sales, they have their list of stock and implements printed in the well-read local newspapers. The farmer realizes that he is a business man and if he is to get the best out of his business he must adopt business methods.

Any agent coming to your door whom you do not know may be a scoundrel and he may be as honest as the day is long. But you do not know and it is your duty to be prudent and not nibble at every bait. You don't want to be caught as many are by signing "orders," "agreements," "receipts" or other innocent-looking papers for strangers. These harmless and simple-looking documents have often turned up later as bona fide notes.

Of all the stories, I like especially that which tells of a soldier's reply to a woman who exclaimed, "Why, you have lost your arm." "No," he said, "I gave it." And there is another of a Y. M. C. A. nurse who in a hospital, but rather short of bed-clothes said, "I've got a German dying and he has no pillow," upon which every British soldier in the hut jerked up his pillow quickly and offered it. If the war did kill "formal religion," as many think, such incidents as this show that we still have the spirit of Christ working vigorously among us.

The new list of publications of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa contains titles of about three hundred bulletins, circulars and other pamphlets that deal with agricultural practices. These cover the whole range of agricultural and horticultural pursuits, including dairying, field crops, live stock, orchard and garden crops, poultry, insects and plant disease, farm building construction, farm machinery and many other topics. The subjects are arranged alphabetically under general titles. Not only are the lists themselves available from the Publications Branch of the Department but any of the publications contained therein.

Statute labor was the subject around which a lively discussion centered at the session of the Ontario

Good Roads Association in Toronto, and by a small majority the delegates carried a resolution favoring its abolition. The resolution read: "That in maintaining highways, or, in fact, any highways constructed or improved by public expenditure, statute labor should be absolutely eliminated and the improvement of the roads carried on under the supervision of a properly qualified road overseer." Another resolution heartily approved of the policy of Government expenditure in the construction of public highways, believing that such a policy will be a great assistance to the wealth and convenience of the agricultural interests of this Province. The association also expressed the opinion that Provincial aid toward the salary of township road superintendents should be increased from 25 to at least 50 per cent.

McARTHUR'S NEW BOOK

Peter McArthur, well known to nearly everyone in this part of Ontario as a sort of rural humorous philosopher, has just published a book, "The Red Cow and Her Friends," J. M. Dent & Sons, Toronto, price $1.50.

Mr. McArthur wields a prolific pen in a number of influential journals and has made himself famous through the length and breadth of Canada by telling people in a humorous-serious strain of the simple charms of rural life. This is the theme in his present volume, "The Red Cow," which, with appropriate and attractive decorative illustrations, will appeal to all lovers of farm and country life.

The literary position to which this author has attained in the eyes of his countrymen is seen in the following eulogy from a recent issue of the Montreal Journal of Commerce:—"Canada has never produced a Carlyle, an Emerson, a Thoreau or a Bret Harte, but in Peter McArthur she has produced all four with a few additions thrown in."

Here are a few testimonials for patent medicine men: "I have been unable to walk without crutches for a number of years but after using your medicine I ran for office." "I lost my eyesight four years ago. I used a bottle of your eye wash and I saw wood." "I have been dumb ever since I was married, but the other day after taking your remedy I had a speaking likeness taken at the photographers." "Some time ago I lost the use of both arms. Shortly after buying a bottle of your nerve tonic I struck a man for ten dollars." "I had been deaf for many years, but after using your ointment I heard my aunt had died and left me $10,000."

PEGGY BUYS A STAMP

By Pearl Barnes

The Jolly Ten Club was holding its weekly meeting. The knitting needles clicked furiously and there was a steady hum of voices as the news of the week was talked over. Barbara, weekly president, tapped for order. The knitting needles slowed up and stopped, for the Jolly Ten could tell that there was something on the presidential mind.

"Girls," she began, "I have been doing some patriotic thinking lately, and I have come to the conclusion that we should each buy a War Savings Stamp for the club."

A chorus of "ases" went up and the president smiled mysteriously.

"Perhaps when you learn the conditions you will lose that enthusiasm," she warned. "We are all of us, as you know, possessed of more or less ability to earn money. I, therefore, thought it would be a good idea for each of us to earn five dollars by our individual endeavor, and with it buy a War Savings Stamp. Since a stamp costs only $4.63 the remainder of our money can be put into Thrift Stamps. "The more original your method of earning the money, the better. Dorothy, for instance, makes luscious fudge. I suggest she make some of it up into dainty boxes and sell it to her friends."

As she finished the buzz of voices rose excitedly. Only Peggy knitted on in troubled silence, trying to puzzle out a way to earn five dollars. On the way home she appealed to President Barbara, who promised to help her.

"Next evening while reading the paper Barbara came upon a help wanted ad. that gave her a brilliant inspiration. Half an hour later, when Peggy came in, she was still in deep thought. "Have you thought of anything yet?" were Peggy's first words. Evidently the problem had been worrying her.

"Yes," Barbara hesitated, "but perhaps it may not suit you."

"I am ready for anything," Peggy breathed desperately. For answer Barbara handed her the paper, pointing to the ad. "Peggy," reading it, sank into the nearest chair. It seemed preposterous. But later, when she had thought it over, and Barbara had argued in its favor, she looked at the plan in a more friendly light.

So next morning found Peggy knocking at the door of an imposing residence in a neighboring town. The lady of the house, Mrs. A., proved to be in dire need of a maid, and a dinner party was scheduled for that very evening to several of Mr. A.'s business friends.

That evening, when Peggy caught sight of the guests, she forgot all she had even thought she knew about serving a dinner, and she fervently wished she had not thought Barbara's plan such a brilliant one. She was certainly earning her $5.

A moment's breathing space came when she had served the dessert, and she had time to pause. Some magnetic force caused her to raise her eyes, and they stared straight across the table into the eyes of Tom C., President Barbara's big brother. Tom's face was a strange mixture of astonishment, interrogation and adoration.

Peggy was more flustered than she had ever been in her life. In fact, before, and the spoon that she held in her hand dropped to the floor with a clatter that seemed to her overexcited nerves to shake the house. Under the glaring eyes of Mrs. A. she recovered it and retreated to the kitchen.

Once in the safety of the kitchen she struggled hard to keep back the tears. She might have to go into the dining-room again, she knew, and it would not do at all for Tom to notice that her eyes were guiltily red.

From now on Tom and she had been the greatest of friends. In fact, Tom had been trying for a month to get up courage to pop the question, when the usual lovers' quarrel arose, apparently just to prove that the course of true love never did run smooth. Since then Peggy had tried in vain to forget Tom, and he in his turn had forewarned all thoughts of girls in general and of one girl in particular.

Peggy stood tense, straining her ears for the sound of the bell that should summon her back to the dining-room. They had finished, for she heard them discussing the music room. Quietly she crept into the now empty dining-room, pausing to listen.

She heard Tom laugh, and the sound brought the hot tears to her eyes. The thought of a dreary life without Tom proved too much for poor Peggy. She fled to the seclusion of the back porch where she crumpled in a wretched heap on the top step. She leaned her weary head against the piazza rail, stifling a sob. The tears would come, though, and the filmy lace cap that had fallen unheeded beside her served as a pillow for her misery.

Above her the velvet sky was pierced with a thousand tiny diamonds the magical air of soft summer night was heavy with fragrance. The thrifty chorus of the toads in a nearby meadow broke the summer stillness, and somewhere up under the sheltering eaves two sleepy swallows were twittering.

A door opened softly, so softly that Peggy did not hear. Tom stood above her a moment. Then he gathered her, tears and all, into a smothering embrace. There she wept out the whole story, and Tom didn't seem to mind it in the least that his snowy shirt front was being wet with Peggy's tears. In fact, he seemed to like it.

When Peggy presented her hard-earned W. S. S. at the next meeting the Jolly Ten were very curious to know how she had earned it, but contrary to the general reputation of womanhood she kept it a secret, and to this day only Tom, Barbara and Peggy herself knew how she earned that $5 for War Savings Stamps.

Your Income Tax

Have you filled out your income tax returns? They are very complicated, but over in the United States a simple way of arriving at the net amount has been discovered. It may not be altogether acceptable, but it tells the Government a lot about your private affairs and your own personal charms and accomplishments. Here it is:—

First take your income.
Add wife's income.
Divide by your eldest son's age.
Subtract your telephone number.
Add electric light bill.
Divided by number of kilowatts.
Multiply by your father's age.
Add number of gold fillings in teeth.
Add your house number.
Subtract wife's age (approximate).
Divide by number of aunts you have.
Add the number of uncles.
Subtract number of daughters.
Multiply by number of times you have gone up in an airplane.
Subtract your best golf score;
Add a pinch of salt.
And then go out and Borrow the money to pay the tax.

BY-LAW NO. 254

A By-law to Authorize the Municipal Council of the Village to Pull Down the Old Buildings of the Village of Glencoe Which Are Deemed in an Unsafe Condition as Regards Danger From Fire or Risk of Accident.

Whereas there are a number of old dilapidated buildings in the village of Glencoe which detract greatly from the general appearance of the village and are in an unsafe condition as regards danger from fire and risk of accident.

And whereas it is deemed expedient and advisable to have these old buildings pulled down,

Be it therefore enacted by the municipal council of the village of Glencoe that pursuant to chapter 192, section 490, sub-section 21, Revised Statutes of Ontario, the municipal council of the village of Glencoe be and they are hereby authorized to pull down or repair at the expense of the owner or owners thereof any building, fence or structure which by reason of its ruinous or dilapidated condition, faulty structure or otherwise is in an unsafe condition as regards danger from fire or risk of accident.

Passed this three readings and finally passed this seventh day of April, 1919.
