

In the main, this is a dyspeptic world. We only see happiness in youth. There is a brief space before the constitution is ruined. Then we begin to eat heavy dinners. We must have late suppers. We mix edibles, good in themselves, with results which are quite disastrous. We drink too much with our meals. We drink too much, perhaps, without any meals. God knows!

What we are sure of is that we are wretched. When we awake in the mornings what would we give for the elastic feeling which once was ours before mistaken civilization had inoculated us with disease!

We have no relish for our breakfast. We go to our business listless and heavy-eyed. The horrible dream of the night still haunts us. We always dream of disaster. Even the sun does not dispel our gloom.

And what have we been doing in the past? Why, spending our good money upon so-called remedies which have proved of no avail. Have we not listened to the siren tale which any creature could so easily cozen us with?

A great many of us have learned better. A day may come when dyspepsia, a disease prolific in correlated ills, may be banished from the earth. But by that time we will know how to cook our food and eat it with benefit and not with hurt to our bodies and minds.

Meantime, wherever the virtues of Dr. Wilson's Herbine Bitters have penetrated, dyspepsia, and all its attendant ills, have disappeared. Thousands have used it with complete success. Thousands more will use it in the future through the writing of this notice.

For there are the grateful testimonials of those who have been made robust and healthy by its use; there are the plain evidences of miserable lives not merely mended, but to all intents and purposes re-created; there is a new light and joy in the home where all was gloom and despair; above all, through the use of Dr. Wilson's Herbine Bitters, which have been prepared with the sole purpose of effecting a radical cure for this particular disease.

We see Men and Women, who had given up hope, once more putting their shoulder to the wheel of life, made happy and bright, fit to bear burdens and crosses, if need be, through the implanting of a new energy by the use of this invaluable specific.

Dyspepsia is at the bottom of our jails and asylums. It is dyspepsia which produces moral pimples upon the body politic. And it is Dr. Wilson's celebrated Herbine Bitters which conquers this foe of health and happiness.

For Dr. Wilson's Herbine Bitters have this one thing clearly in view. The preparation is not a cure-all. It does not pretend to cure all the ills which have been transmitted to the human family through a long series of generations.

But—it cures this one hateful thing which has unnerved our best men, and which has caused resolutions of "pith and moment to turn awry." By a careful collection of the data of the disease, by a thorough understanding of all the symptoms which attend it, and which, taken in the lump, produce a condition in which life literally becomes a burden, a specific cure was prepared which, in no case has been known to fail.

Dr. Wilson's Herbine Bitters have brought joy and comfort to many a home. Taxes are sure and always unwelcome; but taxes may be endured, if there be health and energy. Poverty is unlovely; but even poverty can be faced if there be strength and mutual love in the home. When the body is weary and emaciated; when the food which we need to sustain us does us no good; when we feel so disheartened that we are willing to give up the struggle, and let our neighbors get ahead in the race—then, indeed, are we miserable and unhappy. All ills can be endured, if there be the brightness in the eye, the elasticity in the step.

The world is open to him who has the strong arm and the clear head and the robust health. When dyspepsia attacks you you would be wretched if you had all the wealth of the Vanderbilts. Let no person be so foolish or so wicked as to envy the rich. The best blessing which God can bestow is health.

And we have only ourselves to blame if the blessing be withdrawn. We have disobeyed the laws of health. We have abused our systems. It may have been our forebears, and we are suffering for their sins.

Do not be sceptical, because some other so-called specific has failed you. Dr. Wilson's Herbine Bitters never fail.
