The Golden Age for Children.

By RUTH CAMERON.

This is most assuredly the golden age for children. Every once in a while I come across a new to that conclusion. The occasion of my latest arrival thereat was furnished by a small person who was making valentines. I saw her using what I thought might be the lace paper which I had seen used in the making of a very dainty lace heart which was one of a dozen different patterns. Besides these there were all sorts of marvelous things, little red hearts, tiny arrows, adorable little cupids of various shapes and sizes, in short, a most elaborate boughten outfit for the making of valentines. My mind went back to the bits of pink and red crepe tissue paper, the scraps of cardboard and carefully treasured candy box lace with which we used to fashion valentines when I was a girl and I wondered why I had been so foolish as to be born too soon.

Take the Immortal Game of Indian.

The ways in which the kindergarten play spirit plus modern commercialism have endowed the childhood of to-day really are remarkable when you stop to think of it. Take for instance the immortal game of Indian. There was a time when the only way an Indian could be distinguished from an ordinary small boy was by the fact that he conducted himself a little more wildly and warwhooped instead of merely hallooing. To-day, the average boy who plays Indian has a perfect Indian outfit in which to dress the character.

And Even Pictures Move Nowadays.

Then take the movies. Is not the change from stereotypical to moving pictures typical of the intensification and heightening of the entertainment offered to children to-day? Compare the tameness of the occasional stereotypical lectures wherein the only way in which the pictures differed from magazine pictures was the fact that they were life sized and inclined to flicker with the thrill of the pictures that move and tell a story. And then think of the boy scouts and the campfire girls and the playgrounds and all that is done for boys and girls through these agencies.

Not Born Too Late After All.

As one looks back, one feels as if one's own childhood must have been very dreary and devoid of life and color. And yet, it wasn't. One wonders why. And then one catches oneself questioning if the imagination unassisted by costly toys and Indian outfits and moving pictures did not do as much in those days as it does to-day. There is always a compensation, Emerson says. Perhaps we were not born too late after all.

THE SUMMER BEAUTY BOX.

The summer traveller's beauty box should contain everything necessary for looks and comfort at home and a little more. For at home one can buy the thing that runs out, but in the country village—in the wild wood—in a land where you do not speak a word of the language—you may be weeks without the beauty soap you need. Then, indeed, the bottle of toilet water which you have forgotten to bring, the thimbleful of cold cream and the cake of good soap left behind, are appreciated blessings. So fit up your travelling beauty box with every convenience before you start upon your summer outing. Here are some of the things it should contain:

A comb with coarse teeth, a brush with firm bristles, cold cream, powder and toilet water; a cake of good soap, salt, borax and some soft clean gauze. There must be, besides, all the utensils for manicuring, an eye cup, a pumice stone, a vial of peroxide and various sorts of hairpins.

Buy for the receptacle a theatrical make-up box, or if it is not procurable in your town, take an old towel and sew up one end into four or more pockets. Actresses often carry their make-up in an ordinary towel, but by lapping over the end and running a line of thread for the towel, the various things can be kept apart. When they are packed, roll the towel tightly from the pocket and stuff the trim roll into a tight corner of your handbag.

Since the trunk does not always arrive at its destination as quickly as the traveller, the handbag is al-

FREEDOM'S FRIENDS.
We have spoken through our guns;
They have shrieked our love of right.
We have spoken through our sons
Who have gladly borne the fight.
We have told the crushed and weak
That we serve no selfish creed;
Now for justice let us speak
Through the glory of our deeds.

On the far-flung battle line
We have battled for the truth.
As a pledge for all that's fine
We have sacrificed our youth.
We have fought as freedom's friend,
Now the thundering cannons cease
And the warfare's at an end.
Let us be as brave in peace.

In the heat and pain of strife
And the tumult of the test
We have guarded human life
And have rescued the oppressed.
And we boasted that we sought
Only freedom for the world;
Let us live as we have fought,
Now the battle flags are furled.

We have written it in blood
That for justice we will die.
Making truth our battle cry.
We have pledged ourselves to seek
Only joys which we may give;
Now for justice let us speak
And for justice let us live.

John Rossiter vs. New York, Nfld. and Halifax Steamship Co., Ltd.

This is a claim for damages arising out of a shortage in a shipment of goods from New York, consigned to the Plaintiff, St. John's and carried on the Defendant's ship "Floride" in February 1918.

The Plaintiff commenced his action by Writ of Summons against the Defendants, a foreign corporation. On the hearing, the Defendants by their counsel Mr. J. J. McGrath, B.L., entered a conditional appearance and moved that the summons be dismissed on the grounds that the service of the Writ was on one Frederick Cornick, a clerk in the office of Harvey & Company who act as Agents for the Defendant's line of steamers. The offices of Harvey and Company are used for the conduct of the firm's business; that there is no office or other part of the premises used exclusively for the purpose of the Defendant's business; that the offices or servants' wages are paid by Defendant's to Harvey & Company; the service of the Writ on Frederick Cornick was not a service on Defendants or on Defendant's agents.

In support of his position he cited the case of "The Princess Clemence," Law Reports, P.D., 1897, page 18.

Mr. Gibbs, K.C., Counsel for the Plaintiff, contended that although the Defendants are a foreign corporation, they have been doing business in this country for many years at a fixed place in St. John's; their Bill of Lading advised Harvey & Company as their agents in Newfoundland; that Harvey and Company issued tickets and made contracts for the carrying of passengers and booked freight for goods to be carried in Defendant's steamships. It is well known to shippers that Frederick Cornick in a special office on Harvey & Company's premises, conducts the Defendant's business in St. John's, and the service of the writ on Cornick was a good service.

He cited the case of "Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Company," reported in Law Times Reports, Vol. 111, Sept. 1914, page 97.

Under the general rules made for regulating the practice and procedure of the Central District Court, I find on the question of service of Civil process rule 8 sets forth: "Where a defendant or defendants reside out of the Colony, but have a place of business or residence, partner or agent, therein, service of a summons shall be effected upon the resident partner or agent, or person in charge of the place of business of such defendant."

The Defendants in this action are a foreign corporation residing out of the Colony but doing business in Newfoundland through their agents, Harvey & Company, St. John's. Frederick Cornick is a clerk in the employ of Harvey & Company, and as such, does not represent the Defendants, nor is he a person in charge of the place of business of the Defendants.

I hold that the service of the writ of Summons on Frederick Cornick is not a service on the Defendant or their agents. I therefore accede to the motion of Defendants' Counsel and set aside the service.

Dated at St. John's, March 14th, 1919.

Judge.

Household Notes.

A pretty tunic blouse of blue linen shows smocking on the hips.

One may wear the veil thrown over the hat and let fall as it will.

Many of the new evening gowns hang from shining shoulder straps.

Little diamond arrows are used to hold the veil to the brim of the hat.

Full figures can be made to appear slim with correct straight lines.

For early spring wear are hats made entirely of ribbon, satin or taffeta.

Blouses, designed to be worn with suits, are especially partial to embroidery.

Some of the new jersey frocks for spring come in strong colors like turquoise.

LANCER-CORPORATION

Accidentally a few days ago I glanced at a copy of one of the daily papers and a couple of words caught my eye. "Ypres Life Dead," such were the words. My thoughts went rolling back over the months and into the last days of death, desolation, desecration, destruction were evidently the result of the war. Memory led me over to the Ypres-Menin Road, past the remaining Cafes and into the ruins of St. Martin's Cathedral. I will stand forever, a monument to the Kultur and attempt to get down.

On taking the outskirts of the only town I passed the remnants of a splendid railway station; an overgrown reservoir lay on my left and, turning to the right still showed a line of houses in fairly good preservation though the blue sky was visible through the roofs in many places.

I have often heard the soldiers at the Kaiser had sworn to blow the shells in Ypres to the ground and count. I have never heard anything official of this vow. On the appearance of the city, I could think, that more than an ordinary amount of "hate" was poured out. I went through some bye streets and noticed the small shops that were minus everything but shell-holes. On strolling into the big world of Ypres I saw what remained of the Cloth Hall that was famous in the world over for its splendid architecture and its valued paintings. Many a famous brush. But my reason were brought to a very abrupt halt on hearing a shell scream across the buildings and go crashing into the ruins of St. Martin's Cathedral. I moved further on into the desolate city and watched the steady falling. It seemed as tho' Ypres could never leave off his dirty work of destruction of the Temple of Culture could not have been more complete than the leveling of Ypres. The road leading over the bridge at crosses the Canal. This bridge is known as the Menin Gate; turn north and you are left but keep straight on. You have an ounce of British shell will tell at the sight before you. I have been told that this was one of the best parts of Ypres and now it is a desolation. If a rock burst
