"Call of The Broom

One of the quaintest of many quaint stories told by Sir James Denham in "Memoirs of the Memorable" concerns Sir Frederick Morton Eden and a

It appears that Sir Frederick, passing to and fro across St. James's Square to his club, would often stop and give the tattered crossing-sweeper a shilling.

This went on for a matter of years, till one day, as Eden was passing along, the crossing-sweeper said to him: "Would you mind, sir, if I spoke to you for a minute or two?" "Not at all," replied Sir Frederick.

"I am going to ask you, sir, a very strange thing, but I hope you will humor me. I want you to come and dine with me to-morrow night," adding, "I will give you a jolly good dinner." Struck by the strangeness of the request, and scenting an adventure, Sir Frederick accepted the invitation, and was given the address, which to his surprise, was in a very good neighbor-

The following evening, to his further amazement, he entered a beautiful, well-ordered house, and was welcomed by his host, who was attired in evening dress.

It turned out that the latter was a gentleman by birth, who had fallen on hard times and taken up the crossing in St. James's Square, which he had held for many years.

After he had been there for some time, and had grown accustomed to his calling, a distant relative died and left him a fortune. But what he quaintly termed "the call of the broom" was irresistible, and back to his tattered clethes and crossing he needs must go.-Tit Bits.
