

Jeannie Sinclair, OR, THE LILY OF THE STRATH.

CHAPTER XXVI. THE GOLD DIGGINGS—FORTUNE BEGINS TO SMILE ON ROBERT DOUGLAS—A CRUEL ROBBERY.

William Denman having the quieter and profounder nature of the two, could better sustain the thoughts and feelings which filled his soul. Robert's capacity of suffering was the more vehement, but William's was the keener, and he bore himself best in silence. He spoke so seldom of his love for Jeannie that his friends thought his separation from her had cured him of his malady, and that now he would bear the loss of her with equanimity. But in this Robert Douglas grievously misjudged the heart of William Denman. Absence and distance had not made his love for Jeannie Sinclair the less, and the pain of losing her was not a whit the less poignant than it had ever been. Still the hard work in which he with his companions was engaged was a blessed thing for him, inasmuch as it prevented his thoughts from dwelling uninterrupted on the sore trial to which his heart was subjected. The day's hard toil brought the night's sweet rest. Consequently hours which would otherwise have been spent in indulging melancholy thoughts brought the blessed experience of profound repose.

"It's time we were at it again, sirs," cried Watty, putting an end to the silent reverie which he himself had produced. "The shadow of the rock is on our hole, and our very lung it will be the gloamin'."

Blithely and briskly he sprang up, as with a loud voice he uttered the above, and leaping down into the hole, resumed his work with renewed energy. Robert and William silently took up their shovels, and their evening work of gold-seeking went forward as before. The words which Watty had uttered so loudly, and in his broad Doric accent, were overheard by a man sauntering on the opposite slope, and his steps were immediately arrested. He paused for a moment, then stealthily approaching the brow of the height, peered down upon them.

The dress and appearance of this man were noteworthy. Evidently he was not a gold-digger, for his garments, though shabby, were not soiled with the clay of the holes, and his white soft hands gave token that he was not in the habit of undergoing hard labor. His look was of the keen, cunning, vagabond kind. He had an air of dissipation, and the jaunty aspect of one who lived by his wits. A single glance was sufficient to make those who saw him for the first time doubt his respectability—he bore the unmistakable impress of a man who eschewed honest industry, and made his way through life by ways and means not always to be commended.

This personage not one of our three friends either saw or heard, not even when he glided a few steps down the slope and crept under some trailing bushes, where he lay quite still, overlooking their operations. These operations went on for an hour or two with much of the usual result. Watty dug away sweatingly with his pickaxe, and tossed up the loosened soil with his large shovel, that the others might rifle it of its golden grains. And all the time the man on the slope in his covert watching them. He might have no special purpose in doing so. The place where he lay afforded a cool and welcome shelter from the heat and glare, and for these and these only it might be that he remained in it so long.

Suddenly an exclamation burst from the three diggers simultaneously. One shovelful which Watty threw out of the hole fell upon the heap with a rattling noise, and there rolled away from it to the base of the little mound a yellow shining lump.

They all saw it at the same moment. Robert was the first to pounce upon it, and the look of intense, joyous excitement which he regarded it was indescribable. He clutched it with his two hands, and turning it round and round examined it eagerly. "In luck at last!" said William, with a quiet but satisfied smile.

"Eh, megsty me! is that a nugget?" gasped Watty, as, with eyes nearly starting from their sockets, he stared at the shapeless lump, streaked with brown and yellow, in Robert's hands.

"It is, it is!" answered Robert in a tone of breathless gladness.

"My goodness, there's may be mair' o' them," exclaimed Watty, resuming his work in the hole with sudden and frantic energy, in the hope of finding that the golden egg which had been turned up was but one of a nest. In this, however, he was disappointed. Nothing like another nugget came to light.

Meanwhile, Robert and William were engaged in rifling the lump of the patches of earth which stuck to it, and they found to their joy that it did not consist of mixed gold ore, but was a piece of pure unalloyed metal, weighing, as near as they could guess, about four pounds.

"Worth two hundred sovereigns at least," observed William. "A few more such prizes and the price of Clonver is in our tent. What say you now, my boy? Is this not a rebuke to your late despondency?"

"O, William," replied Robert, in a voice quivering with emotion, "my first hope re-views—the hope which animated me when I first resolved to come to this place. Heaven grant that it may in the end be realised!"

"Be assured, my dear boy," rejoined William, gravely, but in a tone of undoubting decision, "be assured that you shall not lose Clonver."

The day was not yet done, but the friends resolved to celebrate their success by ceasing work, and after partaking of a hearty meal, enjoying the evening in a way most congenial to them. They, therefore, left their tools in the hole—the being sufficient to preserve their right to the place—and, carefully concealing the lump they had found in a tin pitcher, adjourned to their tent in a quiet, indifferent manner, so as not to raise the suspicion among the rest of the miners that they had come upon a nugget. It was a dangerous matter for those concerned when such a fact came to light in the diggings, for as these swarmed with desperate characters who thought nothing of robbery and murder, a tent which was known to have a nugget in it had to be carefully watched by its proprietors, well armed, and ready by night and day to defend their treasure. Hence the importance of the present occasion of not exciting the belief that any extraordinary luck had befallen them.

FOR NEURALGIA.—Innumerable the best known cure for neuralgia, rheumatic pains, headaches and ailments of that nature, that has yet been brought to public notice, is Briggs' Allevator. This valuable compound is prepared by Dr. J. Briggs, the celebrated chiropodist, and like his corn curative is an undoubted success. A very severe case of neuralgia cured by a few applications of the Allevator, came under our own observation within the past week, and we can therefore vouch for its efficacy. The Allevator is for sale at all respectable druggists throughout Canada. Sold by E. Harvey & Co., Guelph. It can also be had from Dr. Briggs at his office, No. 6, King-st. West, Toronto.—London Advertiser.

SALE OF CAVALRY HORSES.—The sale of horses belonging to the different corps in garrison in Toronto, was commenced at the Crystal Palace barracks on Monday. A large crowd of all descriptions from the city flocked to the general rendezvous to meet an equally assemblage of experts from other parts of the Province and from many of the neighbouring States. The prices realized were, in many instances, decidedly good, and seldom, indeed, below what could reasonably be expected. So much was this the case that the American buyers were completely nonplussed by the high prices paid. The ordinary rates were from $200 to $300, Mr. John Shedden bought Col. Jennings mare for $500.

UNPARALLELED EYE PRESSES. MONEY, MONEY IS WANTED. LAZARUS, MORRIS & CO'S PERFECTED Spectacles! AND EYE GLASSES.

The large and increasing sales of these PERFECTED GLASSES is a sure proof of their superiority. We were satisfied that they would be appreciated here as elsewhere, and that the reality of the advantages offered to wearers of our beautiful lenses, viz: ease and comfort, the assured and readily ascertained improvement of the sight, and the brilliant assistance they give in all cases, were in themselves so apparent on trial, that the result could not be otherwise than it has, in the almost general adoption of our Celebrated Perfected Spectacles by the residents of this locality. With a full knowledge of the value of the assertion, we claim that they are the most perfect optical aids ever manufactured. To those needing Spectacles, we afford at all times an opportunity of procuring the best and most desirable.
