parish priest of the old school. He fleated the lord of Saint Felix spoken of as a bel esprit, as no little of a roue, and altogether as a man of the time—as a "philosopher," and as an enthusiast about the rights of man. But when, ar ter much hesitation, he summoned up courage to call upon one whom his prin-ciples and his respect for the lord of the soil caused him to fear, he was no less charmed than surprised. He obtain-ed an interview in order to request cer-tain indulgences for his poor and struggling flock; and not only was he himself treated with the utmost courtesy and kindness, but he was enabled to carry back to Saint Felix, together with a most glowing account of its master, such a harvest of material benefits, that love and reverges for the name of De love and reverence for the name of De Croisville became at once an active prin-ciple of faith in the place. The fact was, that it suited the marquis just then, as a man of the times and professed philosopher, to show an unusual amount of generosity to a set of people about whom, in reality, he did not care a straw, although they did happen to be his own. Consideration for the people was, though a little late in the day, in fashion at court just then, and no doubt his acts of munificence to his poor villagers somehow or other came to the ear of the King and Queen. But, of course, the cure and his flock were able to look no farther than the deed itself.

Henceforth, the existence of the mar-quis seemed to be much more of an actual fact to his people. They began to take an interest in everything that concerned him, and eagerly opened their ears to catch up every floating rumor with which his name chanced to be mingled. Nor was their feeling towards him of the nature of that gratitude which has been defined as a lively sense of favors to come; it partook of that, doubtless, but when those who have all their lives been obliged to look for favors to God alone, find that they are not forgotten by man after all, their feeling to their first human benefactor is something far more than one of ordinary gratitude. And rumors did come even to Saint Felix sometimes. To what part of France, indeed, did they not come, during those next two years? First they heard of the marquis as one of the most zealous defenders of the rights of the people, even against his own order; and then all Saint Felix became Girondist to a man, with the solitary exception of the cure, who still held by the old paths, and as he was as much beloved by his flock as a good and simplemented priest can be the symmetries.

hearted priest can be, the sympathies of the place came to be made up of a curious blending of republican ideas with the most childlike religious faith. The cure must be right, and the seigneus could not be wrong; and so the parish made a compromise with itself. This, however illogical, was not difficult, for, in truth, the Girondism of the place was little a matter of the head, as its Cath-olicism. Then, not long afterwards, olicism. Then, not long afterwards, when the day of Mirabeau was over, the peasants heard of their lord as a friend of the Vergniaud, and as one who

Though the place has been spoken of as a village, it in reality consisted not of houses and cottages more or less closely packed together, but of some half-dozen outlying chalets, of which the church was the center rather metaphorically than in fact. There was a chateau also, but it was in ruins, and had not been inhabited every by the

of its security. But why this sanctuary of nature had been abandoned by the quiet race of herdsmen and wood-carvers, who had the best right to its protection, requires some explanation.

The lord of Saint Felix, while places still had lords, had been the Marquis de Croisville, or Creville, as he was called by his vassals, to whom, however, he was little more than a myth, or a mere abstraction, of which his intendant was the not very agreeable embodiment. Before the year 1788, all that the present generations of the Saint Feliciens had known of the present bearer of the title was that he was a young man of about 30 years old, that he wa smuch about the court, and that he had married a wife who was a stranger to the country. The cure knew a little more, however. About a year before the meeting of the States

PART I.—In France: Containing the Events of One Night.

CHAPTER I. There is no better rule, in spite of the disregard that is usually paid to it, than that every book, of whatever kind it may be, snould begin with a sentence or two two explain its motive, so that the inhending reader may not be cheated into easting his time supposing the motive o explain its motive, so that the inending reader may not be cheated into wasting his time, supposing the motive o be obviously worthless, in having to ind out the worthlessness of it for himelf; and not only so, but that the author himself may be kept from straying out of the straight road without good and sufficient reason. In accordance, then, with this most excellent principle, let it be clearly understood that the motive of this story is, so far as it professes to have any motive at all, the Power of Circumstance—that demon of demons which, whether for good or ill, the will of man may, indeed, call into life, but can seldom control and never wholly exorcise—and the way in which it entered into conflict with the wills, impulses and characters of certain men and women who lived not very many years since, and of whom at least one or two were born not too long ago to be living vere born not too long ago to be living were born not too long ago to be living still.

Before setting out, however, it is necessary, by way of introduction, to give some account of an occurrence that is rather of an exceptional kind in point of detail; and it is only right to say this before narrating it, in order to take the opportunity of warning the reader against thinking that the remainder of his journey will lead him among exceptional character or exceptional scenes. Of the characters upon whose thoughts, feelings and actions the plot of this story depends, there is not one that may not, in some form or another, fall within the range of a very limited experience. All will be seen striving to attain very much the same object, and, considering their dissimilarities of nature, in very much the same way; nor will the object or the the same way; nor will the object or the way be of an essentially uncommon kind. Not one of the dramatis personae will be found altogether bad or good, strong or weak; not one will have any pre-emi-nent claim to the title of hero or heroine, even in the technical sense of the words. Certainly not one will prove to be per-fectly consistent—who, indeed, out of the world of fiction, ever cloes?-so that wen the hest will be hest only by comparison, and the worst will not be with-out excuse. If, therefore, the intending reader is unable to interest himself in men and women as they are of may be in the face of many faults and many weaknesses—if he demand exciting events and abnormal psyschology—he must not complain that he has not been fairly warned when he finds himself disaponce more, he must take what he finds in the introduction for an example of what he will find in the story itself.

It was, then, in the month of Nivose, in the year 1 of Liberty, and in the territory of the French Republic, that a which circumstance took place which may fairly be taken as the beginning of an important chapter in the history of Earl's Dene, which itself belongs to a later time, and as the title of it denotes, to another and nearer land.

Those who are versed in the revolutionary calendar will remember that, in the nth and year just named, what is ed the Reign of Terror was at its height. Eighty persons a day were being guillotined at Paris; sixty were every day shot, drowned or guillotined Lyons; sixty at Bordeaux; sixty at M seilles: two hundred at Nantes: two hundred at Toulon. The King and Queen had already been followed up the steps of the scaffold by the best and by the worst of their judges. Massacre was running riot in La Vendee, while the fields and forests of the Vosges, of the large and of the Cironde ware swarning. Jura, and of the Gironde were swarming with miserable fugitives of all ranks and of all political creeds; for it was no longer nobles and royalists alone who throughout the whole land of France, here was no spot in which even a child night live in safety for a single day. And yet here was at least one such

pot. It was the village of Saint-Felix-les-Rochers, in he Department of Saint-Felix-des-Rochers was small, obcure, not populous, and out of any peaten track. Yet is was not its obscurity that rendered it secure, for at that time seclusion by no means meant security. It was not its politics, even though Saint Felix, like the greater part of the district in which it lay, was re-publican to the backbone, for the guillo-tine had come to be even fonder of republican than of royalist necks. It was not that its inhabitants were so few, for it is among a crowd of strangers that safety is found, rather than among a small circle of friends and neighbors. The real reasons were that there was not just then an able-bodied man in the place saye the circ who would not will. save the cure, who would not willingly have harmed a fly, and whom the women still worshiped, in spite of his never having, like their husbands and time, no one in his senses ever dreamed of ever visiting the place except under compulsion; while no stranger ever had business that could possibly compel him to visit it at any season of the year. Nature had covered it with a friendly mantle of cold and snow, that had made the approaches to it difficult and dan-

HOCKEY. HOW PEEL WON THE GAME. A Pittsburg paper gives the following account of the recent game there in which the Keystones, composed almost exclusively of Canadians, defeated the champion P. A. C.'s. As will be seen the game was really won by the work of Peel, formerly of this

Last night at Duquesne Garden, for the third time this season, the Keystones defeated the champion P. A. C. hockey team. The score was 3 to and it took an extra ten minutes to down the champions this trip. A bunch of old P. A. C. rooters, facetiously styled the "Larimer Avenue Dutch," had a box decorated with P. colors. Led by Frank Barr, they yelled and cheered as they used to do in the good old days when the red and white carried everything in sight. The Keystone rooters were not behind. They also engaged a box and flung their yells of encouragement to the team and defiance to the opposition with a gusto and determination that made the rafters shake and the electric lights blink. As usual, the game was fast, but neither team exhibited much combination work. Several times an inclination to be a little rough took possession of the players, but it was quickly squelched by Referee Phelan, who promptly sent the guilty parties to the bench for a brief rest. The first to suffer was Morrison, who neatly tripped Smith. The first half ended with the score 2 to 2. Not a goal was scored in the second half, but in the extra ten mincure knew a little more, however. About a year before the meeting of the States General, the good father had, for the first and only time in his life, paid a visit to Paris; and he naturally made some Maquiries as to what kind of person the Marquis de Croisville was. What he heard was not likely to please a parish priest of the old school. He heard the lord of Saint Felix spoken of as a utes the Keystones ended by scoring a

The game was hardly on when Rayner and Robinson, by fast skating, took the puck down, but Rayner's shot was poor. Peel immediately took it back to P. A. C.'s goal, and in a scrimmage Sexesmith shot the first goal for Keystone. A little later Peel made a nice run the full ength of the rink, scoring the second goal. Robison, after the face-off, passed to Smith, who made a fine run and passed it back to Robinson, but Jigg's was going too fast to get it a-going, and Campbell, securing the puck, took it down to P. A. C.'s goal. However, Curtin, by good checking, got the rubber, rushed down the ice, passed to Rayner, who scored the first goal for P. A. C. Soon after the face-off, Smith, by clever stick handling, rushed past the whole Keystone bunch, scoring by a shot 20 yards from goal, tying the score. In the extra ten minutes the champions started in to do the Keystones in a hurry. The strong stand made by Peel, at point, however, checked them in their laudable intentions, much to the disappointment of the Larimer bunch. Smith and Robinson did beautiful work, but neither could reach the net. Young, of the Keystones, now put on steam and made a hard shot. Lamb stopped the rubber and it bounded back. Instantly Sexesmith pounced upon it, gave it a whack, and in the net it went, winning the game for the Key-

NEW YEAR'S RESOLUTIONS

Owners Puzzled Over Christening Sign of Inherent Nobleness in the Human Heart.

Historical Events and Places Furnish The New Year Is a Fitting Time to Turn a New Leaf in the Book of One's Life.

> [By Rev. J. T. Sutherland, M.A.] It may be thought a childish thing o make new resolutions with the coming of a new year. Such a thought is a mistake. New resolutions thoughtfully and earnestly made are never a mistake. To be dissatisfied with our present attainments, and to set out to achieve something better, is the most manly and womanly of experiences. The young make resolutions often and easily. But if it is a sign of their haste and inexperience, it is also a sign of their nobleness. Let them never cease to make new resolutions Let them only let them do their resolving with increasing care, wisdom and seriousness; and especially let them develop in themselves that strength of character and will which will enable them to carry their good resolutions into effect. A new year seems a fitting time to turn a new leaf in the book of one's life. Heaven pity him who is ashamed of the old blots, and who does not long to try again for a fairer page. Wrote Henry D. Thoreau one spring as he went forth to a new season with "I go forth to make new demands on life. I wish to begin this summer well; to do something in it worthy and wise; to transcend my daily routine and that of my townsmen; to have my immortality now. pray that the life of this spring and summer may be fair in my memory. May I dare as I have never done. May I purify myself as with fire and water, nothing may escape me. I am eager to report the glory of the universe. May I be worthy to do it; to have got through with regarding human values, so as not to be distracted from regarding divine values. It is reason able that a man should be something worthier at the end of the year than he was at the beginning."

That record in Thoreau's diary was the sign of a sane and wise, as well as of a strong and noble soul. The spirit which animated Thoreau is the spirit of every true life. The noblest men and women never reach the point where they are content with their present attainments. Rather, to such even old age is green and beautiful with new resolves and fresh upward strivings. If any of us ever get beyond making new resolutions and trying to carry them out, beyond turning over new leaves and endeavoring to fill the fresh page with worthier writing, we may be sure that the best of life for us has gone. Even St. Paul wrote, Not as though I had already attained, or were already perfect, but for-getting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those which are before, I press forward." It is a solemn thing to stand, as we are all standing now, on the threshold new year. Let us receive every day and hour of it as a sacred trust from God-a trust too high to put to any but the best and worthiest uses. Says Browning, "Why stay on earth inless we grow?

Writes Jean Paul Richter, "Look not mournfully into the past, it comes not back; wisely improve the present, it is thine; go forth to meet the shadowy future without fear, and with a manly

Wrote Tennyson:

'I hold it truth, with him who sings To one clear harp with diverse tones, That men may rise on stepping stones Of their dead selves to higher things."

God help us all to make noble resolves for the new year which is so near us, and give us strength nobly to carry them out.

NAMES CAUSE MUCH TROUBLE.

Their Yearlings.

Odd Titles for Many Racing Horses.

"What shall we name the yearlings?"
This is a question that annually perplexes the breeders of thoroughbreds, and which has given rise to much discussion among turfmen. The problem becomes each year more and more diffi-cult of solution, as the yearlings in-crease in number. When nothing else suggests itself, the breeder resorts to suggests itself, the breeder resorts to some sort of combination of the names of sire and dam of the colt or filly. The filly Monarka, for example, is by Prince Monaco, out of Narka, and her name is composed of the name of the dam, preceded by the first syllable of the last name of her sire.

But the individual taster and leaving

But the individual tastes and leanings But the individual tastes and leanings of the breeder and the trend of history, fiction, politics—indeed, of every department—are also reflected in the names of thoroughbreds. Almost every states—man, author and politician of promnence is honored by some breeder, and has a namesake now running on the American turf, while many a historical personage or place is commemorated in this or place is commemorated in this tashion.
