For the Insane Ready for Occupation

The new infirmary at the London Asylum for the Insane will be opened next week. Some idea of the extent of the building can be formed from the above reproduction from a photo by a staff artist. The infirmary, which has been in course of erection for many months, is of white brick throughout, and is, from every standpoint, a handsome addition to the institution. The main entrance leads to the administration building, three stories in height. On either side are the wings. The wards are four in number, each wing being two stories in height, with a spacious balcony at the end of each, that adds to the general attractiveness of the building, besides being of particular use for convalescent patients. The new infirmary will accommodate 75 patients, besides housing the medical and nursing staff. The corridors of the building are large. On the left of the entrance is a corner room for the medical super-intendent, and on the right a reception room for the matron. Back of these are other rooms necessary to an administration building. The medical staff also have rooms above these, there being three doctors' rooms, as well as rooms for the head nurse, and those under her control.

One thing particularly noticeable about the building is the abundance of light and fresh air. The structure has been laid out with a view to giving every bit of sunshine possible. Not only is this so in the administration department, but it is also the case in the wards. Every room is well-lighted, as well as the halls. The ceilings are high and everything is arranged with a view to facility and comfort. The upper story of the administration building is perhaps of the greatest importance, for there is located the operating room, thoroughly equipped in every respect, and second to none in Canada. The roof is of glass, allowing light to reach every corner. The floor is of the finest tile, and the wainscoting of white tile, as beautiful as it is clean. The corners and ceiling have been concaved to prevent the collection of dust. Thus the room is thoroughly antiseptic, which is true also of the ante-rooms. On one side is the sterilizing room and on the other the lavatory. To show how carefully the arrangements have been made, the hot and cold water taps are so arranged that they can be turned on by foot, both in the sterilizing room and in the wash room, while the soap is automatically received without touching the hands to anything. The best operating table made has been procured, and the fixtures are of the most improved style. Adjacent to the operating room is the surgeons' dressing room. An nationts to and from the operating floor. elevator has been installed for the carrying While there are a few dormitories, the majority of the rooms in the wards are fitted with but one bed each.

An arrangement in connection with these rooms are openings in the top and bottom of the doors, for the use of the night-watch, making it unnecessary to enter to ascertain if all is well. On each floor are dining-rooms, bathrooms and all modern conveniences, and on the ground floor an up-to-date kitchen has been finished. The system of heating is such that fresh air is heated and distributed through the building, the method being the best yet devised. The basement, like the rest of the building, is well-lighted, and perfect in arrangement. One of the rooms in the basement has been reserved for autopsies, and has been constructed to suit such pur-
