Although the story created a big sensation here in Calgary, everyone seemed to doubt the truthfulness of it. Some people secretly wished it was true, but no one who was in touch with the pugilistic one who was in touch with the pugilistic game in this city regarded it as strictly true. There were several flaws in it, which branded it as false, the most palpable of which was the part about Burns forcing Pelkey to sign an agreement to go on the vaudeville tour while Pelkey was "in jail." Pelkey never spent a minute in jail during his entire stay in Calgary. As soon as it was learned that the McCarty-Pelkey bout had resulted fatally bonds were arranged for Pelkey. Another feature which was rather queer fatally, bonds were arranged for Pelkey.

Another feature which was rather queer was that about Pelkey crawling into Burns' house by the back way. In order to do that, Pelkey would have to swim the Elbow River, as the rear of Burns' house is almost flush against the banks
