Busy City by the Clyde Organizes Great Fair which Illustrates History of Scottish Nation.

GLASGOW, May 13.-Edinburgh the capital of Scotland, but Glasgow has got "the" capital, was the naive ark of a lord provost the other day. He might have added that the city on the Clyde has also got an imagination and a spirit of enterprise unrelied upon to prise upon which it embarks. Interna tional exhibitions held in the city in as regards the numbers attending with made gallant efforts to rival her west ern friends, but notwithstanding that met with but moderate success. To the people of Glasgow the most exquisite poetry is the clang of the hammers in the busy shipyards, and their romance is in the commercial armada that scours the sea from pole to pole. There is something ironical, therefore, in the circumstance that this great commercial city should have been chosen in preference to Scott's "Mine Own Romantic Town' for the setting of one of the most thrilling and romatic historical stories that any nation can provide.

The previous exhibitions in Scotland were intended to illustrate the industrial growth of the "upper part of the island, to quote a famous phrase of the late Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman but on May 1 the Duke of Connaught of the history, art and literature of the

The exhibition stands upon an ideal site, 50 acres in extent. This site has already been associated with two exhibitions, and combines accessibility and natural beauty. The design of buildings is in keeping with the object of the exhibition, there being an oldworld charm about the structure. Beautiful Arcadian-like walks intersect the grounds, which are appropriately overthe University of Glasgow. And yet, as divisions of the Turkish lodges, which assure me that I can count on my sol if a reminder of Glasgow's greatness, the mighty hum of the adjacent shipyards penetrates to the heart of the grounds.

"Ane sittin lyoun armid for his defens," an old heraldic saying, which is emblazoned over the entrance to the Palace of History, and on the apex of the tower of the Industrial Hall, might be taken as the text of the exhibition. Scotland was cradled in a war chariot and reared to national manhood 'amid the clash of arms. The stirring story is faithfully depicted in the Palace of History, a noble building of baronial design, which occupies the most prominent site within the grounds.

Lectures on the significance of these exhibits are given by some of Scotland's greatest scholars and orators.

The chequered career of the unfor tunate Stuarts, especially of that strange, wayward, fascinating woman, Mary Queen of Scots, is abundantly llustrated. There is a rare portrait of Mary depicted in mourning, painted Falkland Palace, the ancient hunting home of the Stuart kings, subsequently the stronghold of Rob Roy, and now within the grounds, with as much fidel-
