even after women get the vote to keep them out of the legislature for some time." "I'll never want to get into parlia-ment, but I don't know what my granddaughter will do," was the sum-ming up of Mrs. McClung on this point, in answer to the query. Those who went to Massey Hall last night with ideas based on the theory that women are devoid of humor had them completely scattered to the four winds of heaven by the witty and epigrammatic sayings of this brilliant woman from the west, whose humon deals out philosophy in such delight-ful doses that it takes some time to discover the medicine under the spicy sugar-coating of the pill. War That Never Ends.

"The war that never ends," was the title of Mrs. McClung's address, and this was later defined as the continuous struggle unceasingly waged for better conditions. "We often hear of resignation," said the speaker, but there is no resigna-tion in nature. Every little seed has one ambition, and that is to get away from its home and expand. Some years ago, when disease carried off the people of a community, those left behind were resigned and said it was the 'will of God. It was not the will of God.'' said the speaker, "and these people were resigned when they should have been cleaning up. People are beginning to waken we and thist these beginning to waken up and think they are beginning to cultivate a social conscience and to see that flowery beds of ease never led to the skies, but in an entirely different direction.

"This has discouraged celestial im-migration," said Mrs. McClung, while her audience greeted her saily with a wave of laughter that went all round the hall.
