There is a hiatus to one young dream of love at Syracuse and it was Jude, b. g., Chas. Price, born of the over-confidence of a senior at the Syracuse University in his ability to handle an automobile, says the Sun. He hired a runabout and took the beloved one for a ride to Cicero, where they had a delicious dinner. When they were ready to depart the young automobilist left the fair one on the porch and went to the shed for the go-wagon. He got it started all right and sallied forth intent upon rounding up at the porch with a flourish. The flourish appeared, but the car did not pause. As he shot past the porch he cried out: "I can't stop it!" and on down the road he flew, leaving the girl anxiously wringing her hands, while a heartless hanger-on whistled "The Girl I Left Behind Me." The young man was so hopelessly fuddled that he rode on and on without being able to stop the car. He hoped that the car would run out thought Kingmore would clean up first of gasoline, but it didn't; he hoped that something would break, but it did money without trouble, but Darkey, not. Yesterday's card was pulled off with but one mishap, and that was to Jockey "Jimmy" McDonald, who had the mount on Dutch Frigate in the running event. The accident happened in the first heat, and put both rider and horse out of the race. The horses had reached the north end of the track and were about to turn into the stretch, when Dutch Frigate, who was at the fagend of the field, stumbled and fell, throwing her rider fifteen or twenty feet. Fortunately for McDonald, the horse was well in the center of the track, and a collision with both the rail and the outside fence was avoided. The for a few days.

Reed Blair, the veterinary of the garden, kept a close watch on the open-faced Bachida and decided she had an abnormal growth somewhere in the vicinity of one of her small back teeth, which bear a resemblance to toy drumheads. His diagnosis was confirmed by Raymond L. Ditmars, the curator, and together they went to work to extirpate the growth. Bachida was thrown down and chained and her head fixed in a wooden clamp, so as to be immovable. Dr. Blair discovered the seat of pain in the masseter muscles, which control the opening and closing of the jaws. To give the unwieldly patient as little 12-INNINGS GAMES To give the unwieldly patient as little pain as possible, he sprayed the outside of the law with ether until it was of the jaw with ether until it was about half frozen. Then he plunged in a lance, but the thick hide resisted the steel, and it became necessary to grind a hard steel carving knife down to a fine point to make a successful incision. The point of the improvised probe penetrated a large tumor and gave Miss Bachida instant relief. Her big marble-like eyes seemed to roll in their sockets, and her struggles ceased. A drainage tube was inserted, and after the tumorous was dried a pint of antiseptic fluid was injected. The chains were taken off, the operators left the cage, and the patient began a clog dance and a most unrhinoceros attempt to stand on her head and climb the bars of her cage.

By sunset she had become quiet, and beyond occasional efforts to pick her .333 teeth with her left hind foot, appeared to be contented and happy.
