SCENE FROM "THE PENALTY," THE NEW DOMESTIC DRAMA TO BE PRESENTED AT THE GRAND ALL THIS WEEK.

A LONG JUMP.

Traveling thru the west, "once upon a time," Frank H. LaRue of "The Penalty" Company was compelled to "jump" from Chicago to San Francisco, and tho he kept the details of the trip quiet at the time, he doesn't mind who knows it now.

Transportation had been arranged for himself and company on the fastest overland train between the two cities. Thru some misunderstanding, he reached Chicago station twenty minutes after the Limited, with his company on board, had departed.

In this emergency an official of the road took a long chance, and three hours later the actor was flying toward the Pacific Coast aboard the fastest thing on wheels west of the Missouri river. It was the racer, made up of four mail cars and a powerful engine, which earns a heavy subsidy from the postoffice department by rushing the transcontinental mail across country at the rate of 90 miles an hour and Mr. LaRue stowed away on a pile of empty mail sacks was trying to go to sleep in the most uncomfortable bed he had ever encountered, thinking regretfully of his comfortable drawing room in the Limited.

Just before dawn he fell asleep, but was soon aroused by one of the men in the car and assisted off the train to a lonely platform. Here he shivered for a long half-hour without seeing a single human being, or even a human habitation. He was about to abandon all hope of rescue when a headlight appeared far down the rails to the east. A minute later a heavy train came to a grinding stop and a Pullman conductor jumped to the platform with a cheery, "All right, Mr. LaRue, here we are." It was the Limited, which the postoffice department racer had passed about 50 miles back, and which had received a telegraphic instruction from Chicago to pick up one lost actor.
