DOROTHY DALTON

In Joseph Franklin Poland's

"THE MATING OF MARCELLA"

DOROTHY DALTON'S excellent screen work in "The Mating of Marcella," her latest Paramount Picture, has won the hearty admiration of her many admirers. The story of the photoplay, which was produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, is one whose scenes shift from New York to Reno, Nevada, and back again. The drama affords a splendid contrast between the frivolous show-girl type of the "Great White Way" and the warm-hearted, courageous American girl type that predominates throughout the country.

CHAPTER II.

Impatient to be out of New York and on his way West, "Snaky" paced before the train gate awaiting the arrival of Lawless. Ten minutes only remained before the departure of the Limited. The gates were closing when Hyde and Arkins hurried past "Snaky" without seeing him. Filled with dismay, "Snaky" hurried from the station to the Penland and followed by the clerk and bellboys he hastened up to their room. The door was locked with the key on the inside, but entrance was gained through the room adjoining. He found Lawless, bound and gagged.

Released and revived, Lawless told with bitter oaths and threats of vengeance how Hyde had overcome and robbed him.

The morning following Bob's discovery of nickel and cobalt on Jean's ranch, Jean and Bob left the ranch house early to inspect the mine.

Dressed for roughing it and carrying a well filled lunch basket, they rode over the rugged trails and up a mountain side, dismounting on a grassy slope leading to the abrupt edge of a precipice. Peering over the cliff,

Bob said, pointing to a projecting ledge fifty feet below.

"There is your mine. We'd better have lunch first and then inspect it."

While Bob and Jean were eating and discussing the prospective fortune beneath them, Hyde and Arkins arrived at Atawanna. The former, dressed in the height of fashion, bought a horse and when he had convinced the crowd about the corral that he was master in a saddle, he learned the way to Forsythe ranch.

At about the same time, also, Sergeant Bill Barry, of the Canadian

Mounted Police, rode up to Forsythe

Ranch house and inquired of Iron

Star where Miss Bent was. The Indian told him she had left early with

Hardy.

"They ride all day. At Clear Creek canyon," hearing which, the constable rode away to find them.

Bob and Jean, lunch finished, prepared to inspect the mine. Tying one end of a lariat to a tree, Bob lowered the girl over the ledge and down the face of the cliff to the projecting ledge, a most hazardous trip.

"All right," she called up, as she untied the lariat from about her waist, and five minutes later Bob had lowered himself to her side.

Above them as they studied specimens of the ore and discussed the development of the property, a few sparks, carelessly overlooked by Bob as
