THESE FISH TALES NEED NO SALT

In the small streams at the foot of the hills of Penang in Siam there abounds a small fish (Beta pugnax) which the natives call, pug, or the fighting fish. This fish is the Siamese what gamecocks are to the Malays, and built to the standards. As a result of years of breeding, the natives have developed a special race which they use in fighting. The fishes are kept in glasses of water, and fed by their owners, among other things, with the larvae of mosquitoes, or other aquatic insects, which seem to keep them in fighting trim.

The Siamese are as infatuated with the combats of these fishes as the Malays are with the cock fights, and stake on the issue considerable sums of money. In a game at tag, Pugbale, the fish is thrown into a tank, and the right to exhibit fish fights is a royal monopoly, and is farmed, thus bringing a considerable revenue to the King each year.

ANTICS OF FISH.

In June, 1906, the farmers living along Benson Creek, Kentucky, were much surprised at the antics of the heretofore staid fishes found in the creek. The fish were acting strangely on the surface, whence they could be lifted with the hand without any effort at escape on their part, or else were leaping playfully out of the stream in what one of the observers termed a game at tag. Pugbale, the fish is thrown into a tank, and the right to exhibit fish fights is a royal monopoly, and is farmed, thus bringing a considerable revenue to the King each year.

Probably the one tombsone erected on the memory of a fish is to be seen in the garden of Fish Cottage, Bockley, a picturesque village in South Worcestershire, England. The inscription is as follows:

"In Memory of the Old Fish Who Under the soil the Old Fish, do. Twenty years, he, lived and then, did, die.

He was so tame you understand, He would, come, and eat, out of, our, hand.

Died April the 20th, 1885. Aged 20 years."

Fish are occasionally found in strange places. In Guatemala, a curious species of fish, the Pacilia, dory, in the boiling lake of Amatitlan, where it passes its days literally in continual hot water. So hot is the water of this lake, it is said, that to thrust one's hand into it would scald the fingers.

LIVE IN HOT WATER.

Perhaps even stranger still is the circumstance that certain fishes can subsist, apparently in health, in water heated to boiling point. In a French pond, Broussouet found by experiment that several species of fresh water fish lived for many days in water so hot that the human hand could not be held in it for a single minute.

Sausure found living eels in the hot springs of Aix, in Savoy, the temperature of which averages one hundred and thirteen degrees Fahrenheit. In Queensland fish have been found to subsist in a highly mineralized stream that issues from an artesian bore at a temperature of one hundred and twelve degrees.

Occasionally reports are heard of fish being frozen solid in ice and later thawed out, when they come to life, apparently none the worse for their experience. A quite extraordinary tale was told last winter. A gang of wood choppers were encamped eight miles south of Caribou on the shores of a small pond abundant in trout. After catching more fish than they could utilize at once, the directors of the party, after an exceptionally cold night, the evening as well as the day, were found frozen solid. Wanting some for dinner one of the men chopped out several and these were placed in a pan of cold water to thaw out. When the cook went to get them a little later he was startled to find them moving about.

INGENUOUS INVENTOR.

One of the common fishes found in the Alaskan streams tributary to Bering Sea is the blackfish. The natives catch enormous quantities of these through the ice and after they have lain on the ice long enough to be frozen solid, store them in large baskets. Turner, the discoverer of the fish, says its vitality is extraordinary and after remaining frozen in the baskets for weeks it is as lively as ever when thawed out, and he tells of one having been swallowed in a concealed condition by a dog, thawed out by the heat of the stomach and vomited up alive.

Elr John Franklin, the Arctic explorer, reports the case of a carp that had been frozen stiff for thirty-six hours and was apparently lifeless, gaily moving about after it had been thawed.

Fishes have been put to many queer uses while still alive; but probably the strangest was that suggested to the War Department by an inventor. The proposition of submarine torpedoes was the subject of discussion, and he proposed that a shark be imprisoned in a tube at the rear end of the torpedo, and that the shark be kept alive in a tank of water, and that the torpedo be activated by electricity. In case the shark attempted to swim away it would be given an electric shock and in this way kept on its course until the torpedo had reached its target.

FISHES SLEEP.

Another remarkable use to which a fish has been put is as a barometer. The fish is kept in a tank, and atmospheric changes, and when retained in an aquarium is likely to throw their erratic shock and in this way kept on its course until the torpedo had reached its target.

THE BASS AFRAID.

Many a scheme sounds plausible in telling, but fails to work out profitably in practice. Such was the case with an experiment tried by a man in Palatka, Florida, on the St. Johns river a few years ago. Many sports men visit this town year in many to angle for black bass which are very numerous in the river and to supply them with sufficient live bait is a difficult problem. This man conceived the idea of raising goldfish to be used as bait. He built a small pond, secured some breeders and in about a year had a number of fish of a size suitable for the purpose.

He had figured that owing to their bright color the goldfish would fall easy victims to the tempting morsel wriggling along in front of it. But, alas! when the bass saw the shining object in their vicinity they immediately turned tail and fled for their lives and no amount of persuasion could tempt them to venture near one.

So the sportsmen had to return to the use of the time-honored minnow.

PREPARING FOR EXHIBITION.

The coming exhibition which is to be held in the city promises to be one of the best ever held in Canada, and judging by the favorable reports that are being received by the directors there will be a very large number of visitors to the city. Every hotel, private boarding house and home should have their rooms looking its best, and Amland Bros., Ltd., Waterloo Street, have a very large assortment of white enamel and brass beds, springs, mattresses, etc., and everyone should do shopping at the above store, as they have the best stock of furniture at the lowest prices.

WHAT OPIUM DOES

VANCOUVER, July 2.—"To think that Chinese and Hindus can debauch and degrade our women like that! It must be with their tongue in their cheek that they talk of our wanting race superiority. Every time I think of it my blood boils!"

Thus said Chief of Police Chamberlain after the Vancouver Police Court rose the other day.

Millie Sherman, comely, petite and still in her early teens, had been dismissed on a charge of vagrancy. Millie was neatly dressed. She had black eyes—not hard, shiny, heavy black eyes, but eyes dark, soft and liquid, like a tarn among the hills.

Detective told how they found the girl in a Chinese house at 139 Pender street east in a back room on the ground floor. Chinamen were the only other inmates of the house and besides Millie there was an opium-smoking outfit. She was in possession of money when the police found her, and on this circumstance Mr. Parrie, who appeared for her, established his plea that she was not a vagrant.

Millie succeeded in concealing her identity completely. Detective Scott said she was positive he had known her since she was a child, but he could not think of her name. When showed to her parents in New Westminster.

CANDY FOR BATTLESHIPS.

Many thousands of pounds of high grade bonbons were supplied to the vessels of Admiral Evans' fleet on the long cruise to the Pacific. The attitude toward candy has changed of late years. It is no longer thought childish or effeminate to eat bonbons. The medical corps of both services recommend sweets to the men, and the commissary makes it easy for them to get the best. Pure candy and especially chocolate bonbons of high grade are said to lessen the appetite for strong drink and form one of the best and most nutritious energy producing foods known. They are especially recommended for consumption in hot climates. Why? The army at occupation in the Philippines was larger than it now is. Many large shipments of good candy were made to Manila.
