APPRECIATION OF THE GOVERNMENT OF BRITAIN

(From the London Daily Mail).
Professor Lowell is warmly to be congratulated upon having produced what may be described as an indispensable book. There is no other in our language which treats so comprehensively and so dispassionately the British Constitution and its working in the present year of grace.

It is one of Professor Lowell's advantages that he is an American, and therefore entirely free from British partisanship and prejudices. The outside often sees far more of the game than the man who is engaged in playing it. It can scarcely be a mere accident that, as the best work on the United States has been provided by the skill and insight of an Englishman—Mr. Bryce—so the best work on modern England reaches us from an American university.

MORAL GREATNESS.

The author has a gratifying respect for English government. "Measured by the standards of duration, absence of violent commotions, maintenance of law and order, general prosperity and contentment of the people, and by the extent of its influence on the institution and political thought of other lands, the English government has been one of the most remarkable the world has ever known." He examines the reason which have given it this greatness, and he finds them in the conversation of temperance which marks the English race, in their "unshaken confidence in the personal integrity of statesmen, who govern by a code of honor," and in the fact that "one class rules, by suffering the whole nation, as trustees for the public." British government, in fact, is conducted by gentlemen who are incorruptible, and the feeling of the country is all for birth, intellect, and breeding in its public men. The professor admires the English for their assumption "that everybody speaks the truth." It is a sign of moral greatness.

POSITION OF THE CROWN.

It was perhaps unfortunate that the letters of Queen Victoria were published after the present work was written, or they would have supplemented and modified the chapters which deal with the position of the Crown. Moreover, the position of the Crown is changing from day to day, and few would deny that its strength has greatly increased in the last two years. The unparalleled influence which King Edward exercises on the Continent necessarily reacts upon domestic politics and gives his voice a weight which was possessed by none of his predecessors since the early days of George III. Thus, the comparison of the Crown with a wheel turning inside the engine of state with great rapidity, but producing little effect because unconnected with the rest of the machinery, is no longer true. The Crown of today rather resembles the fly-wheel giving stability and order to progress and preventing the engine from destroying itself by racing, or injuring the nation by running too slow.

As for the future of the Sovereign's influence, Professor Lowell holds that it cannot be foretold. "It must depend largely upon the insight, the tact, the skill, the intellect, and the popularity of the monarch himself, and as regards any one department upon his interest in that department. The monarch is not likely to be inured to a life of strenuous work, and yet, in addition to the political routine, which is by no means small, his duties social and ceremonial, are great." Yet surely it is a fact that British Sovereigns are always inured to the most strenuous labor, and for examples we have only to turn to Queen Victoria and King Edward. The British dynasty has never produced royal fainthearts.

The chapters dealing with the work down the salaries of the permanent officials. Unfortunately, too, the deterioration in the municipal personnel has been accompanied by grave scandals.

BRITISH CHARACTER.

Of the London County Council and its work he speaks with respect, but holds its tramway policy and its housing policy wrong—the great defect of the tramway policy being the graded fares, in place of the flat rate usual in the United States. He does not favor municipal trading, and gives facts which suggest that in Boston a company supplies a far better and cheaper service than Glasgow, the model British city, obtains from its corporation. Municipalism has, he thinks, greatly hampered the development of tramways in England. In the penultimate chapter the suggestion is put forth that British character is changing. The argument is based on the exuberance of the Mafeking rejoicings, which are supposed to have shown the disappearance of the old, stolid, slow John Bull. Such a line of reasoning is somewhat superficial. The peace of 1902 was attended by almost identical displays of emotion, which led critics of the day to declare that the genuine John Bull had disappeared. This curious fact has been ignored by social students, and we commend it to Professor Lowell's attention.

This brief summary of some of the notable points in this most valuable book should serve to indicate its vast importance and vital interest. It ranges over a great variety of subjects, and treats them always with philosophical detachment, discrimination, and knowledge.

FATALITIES.

SYDNEY, July 28.—John J. Pembroke, who resided at Langan and did a meat market business at Dominion street, was killed by a horse and carriage between Dominion No. 14 and Langan street, on Monday morning. There was a mark on his face where he struck the ground, but no other evidence of injury or violence. He was on his way home from the new collieries when the fatality occurred, and the theory is that he was either thrown out of the wagon or died from heart failure and fell out. Deceased was aged about 40 and leaves a widow and large family. An inquiry was held and adjourned until Wednesday next.

TORONTO, July 28.—Bursting from bandages with which she was tied in bed and scrambling out of the fourth story window at Grace Hospital, Annie Cookcraft, a typhoid fever patient, hurled herself to the ground and was almost instantly killed this morning. She had taken advantage of the temporary absence of the nurse, who had been attending her, and although the head nurse of that flat and another patient saw her actions, she had disappeared from view as they arrived at the window.

OTTAWA, July 28.—J. L. Kehoe, son of Judge Kehoe of Sault Ste. Marie, and clerk in the Imperial Bank here, was drowned in the Ottawa River today near Rockcliffe park. While swimming in the river he was seized with a cramp.

TORONTO, Ont., July 28.—Rev. G. B. Brown, pastor of the Beaverville Baptist church, was drowned at Jordan Harbor today, during a Sunday school picnic, while bathing.

JENORA, July 28.—The body of Jas. R. Bell was recovered this morning from the Winnipeg River and brought to town. Lillivest, a Swede, who is charged with throwing Bell overboard, has not been caught. He is supposed to be in the city north of the Transcontinental.

PORT ARTHUR, July 28.—Three members of a construction party on the C. P. R. fifty miles west of here, were killed this morning by No. 1 train, a passenger train. The men were foreigners. They were working on a siding and stopped on the line from behind a construction train, just as the passenger train came.

PRINCE IN A PAINT BOX.

Heir to the Spanish Throne Nearly Let Out a Secret.

SAN SEBASTIAN, July 28.—The little Prince de Asturias nearly spoiled a surprise which King Alfonso and Queen Victoria prepared for the Queen mother's birthday, which was celebrated last week. As the Queen mother would not sit for her portrait, King Alfonso, each time he visited his mother, was accompanied by an artist, who was placed in such a position that he could paint unknown to the august sitter.

This scheme worked well until one day the baby Prince, who was stopping with his grandmother, discovered the artist's paint box, which had been left at Miramar Palace, opened it, and covered himself with paint. The Queen mother was much puzzled to know how he got in such a condition. She now knows, as the portrait was presented to her on her birthday, on Tuesday.

Flewelling's Great Slaughter Sale

IS NOW WELL UNDER WAY.

It Is a Great Sale and Only Just Fairly Started

I have already given you the reasons for this sale, how that I bought the stock of the Oak Hall Branch, at an advantageous figure and as a re-opening event I decided to give the public the advantage thereof. I also desired to close out all summer stock. I predicted before this sale opened that it would be the greatest money-saving sale ever held in the North End of the city, and if the phenomenal record of the opening days are maintained there will be no question about it. The sale will continue all next week.
