

BERLIN'S BRISTLING

(New York Herald.)
Berlin, Sept. 12.—"Wir Deutschen fuerchten Gott und sonst nichts auf der Welt" (We Germans fear God and otherwise nothing in the world!) Bismarck's boast has now become the Kaiser's challenge and Berlin is bristling with militarism.
We do not get much news from the outside world, but if the war fever rages elsewhere as it rages here all Europe is an armed camp and every able-bodied man a soldier, with war as his daily bread. Under den Linden is a swarming boulevard of moving troops. Cavalrymen come dashing along, the horses' hoofs pounding the pavement. Occasionally the horses, sharing the excitement, prance into the surging crowds on the wide pavements, but there is never a word of remonstrance or complaint.
"Hoch der Kaiser!" rings out from the man pushed ruthlessly into the gold mass of brother Germans. He picks up his hat, knocked off in the rush, and waves it frantically with an other war cry. Strangers, men and women, gather, arm in arm, to shout and sing. To them every detachment of German troops that comes along is cheered as enthusiastically as if it had already defeated the enemy and saved the Fatherland.

Kaiser in Unter den Linden.
The confidence of the crowds in their Kaiser and his sword is unbounded. The Kaiser appears at intervals, always with an impressive suite and generally accompanied by the Crown Prince and others of the royal entourage. He looks stern—his face flushes to a healthy color and supreme confidence personified in every move and gesture. He bows right and left in his subjects, but I have seen no semblance of a smile.
The Emperor's movements from the Berlin Castle keep German courage and enthusiasm at fever heat and like a fuse around the powder keg of the world. The Kaiser's presence has proved the justice of his cause. He represents himself as striving for peace for years against the odds, but now ready to fight the world if necessary, after the sword has been forced into his hand.
The Crown Prince, whose pro-military utterances have kept him in the limelight for more than a year, is now a hero and a prophet in the eyes of the German people. Together with the ardent supporters of the "big army clique" who have succeeded in increasing the army at each session of the Reichstag, he has predicted that if Germany went to war the Fatherland would be arrayed in arms against the world, so to speak, and the man of the street says he spoke even truer than he knew.

Germany Against the World
The embarrassment of Austria at war with Serbia and the neutrality of Italy may be causing German diplomats sleepless nights, but it is not bothering the average German soldier. "Germany is strong enough alone," he says. The romance of the "German Kaiser in arms against the world" adds to the fiery spirit of militarism here and doubtless will give German troops additional courage on the battlefield.
Vilhelmsstrasse, now under close police guard, is decorated with German flags. German statesmen in tall hats and official dress hurry in and out of the Foreign Office, while lines of taxicabs, with officials and officers in uniform, come along to the sound of cheering. It is useless to try to see officials for war news excepting those who give out only what is carefully scrutinized by the Foreign Office.
The political police department, which has under its head a foreign newspaper correspondent and anarchists, has been reinforced and is exceedingly busy. To the amazement of some of the correspondents they have sent to England and to America has been carefully kept track of. Clippings of dispatches which have appeared in the British press have been filed away so that on the outbreak of war the officials might know what correspondents to expel from the country. There has been little necessity for wholesale expulsions, however, for the cables and telegraph lines permit no news whatever to leave Germany excepting a few statements which Wilhelmstrasse finds not objectionable.

Americans Not Suffering.
From talks I had with Americans leaving Berlin in the general scramble following the declaration of war it seems likely that varied stories of hardships and distress will be sent broadcast to England and America. However, against accepting all these accounts at their face value. Germany is not a howling inferno broke loose, with German officers trampling on the necks of foreigners and officials driving women before them like cattle. I find one party of Americans complaining bitterly of the oppressions it has been subjected to and another party requesting me to emphasize the courtesy and kindness of German officials to the outside world. In nine cases out of ten visitors who have had trouble have not understood the words of the German officials. I find one party of Americans complaining bitterly of the oppressions it has been subjected to and another party requesting me to emphasize the courtesy and kindness of German officials to the outside world. In nine cases out of ten visitors who have had trouble have not understood the words of the German officials.

They found the porters missing and the entrance on Unter den Linden and Wilhelmstrasse closed with people. Taxicabs were not to be had and every one at the hotel was too busy to be bothered. Similar conditions prevailed at other hotels. Telegrams written in English are not accepted at the telegraph offices and the hundred and one convictees of travel have long disappeared, especially as the trains are being used by the troops and about every vehicle on four wheels has been commandeered for military purposes.

Those Americans who have realistic conditions and been willing to car-

ENGLISH PORT WHERE RUSSIANS LANDED ON WAY TO FRANCE.

VIEW OF HULL, ENGLAND.

Hull, England, is a busy port these days, where thousands upon thousands of Russian soldiers are landing on their way to join the allies' army in France. The troops are coming all the way from Archangel, on the Arctic coast of Russia. This extraordinary military move was undoubtedly conceived by Lord Kitchener, who, with the unlimited facilities of the British transport service, rendered possible the landing of the much needed reinforcements. The trip from Archangel to Hull takes about five days.

their own luggage and help themselves have been able to leave in some cases or are making the best of things. German officers have not been willing or able to give up trains commandeered for troops to Americans anxious to get away, but so far as I hear they have been considerate and polite to American and English women on all occasions. I have seen a Prussian officer carrying the baggage of an American girl from the Continental Hotel to the station.

Judge Gerard, at the American Embassy, is having the busiest time of his life. The embassy swarms with Americans day and night. Before long British, French and Russian interests will likewise be calling upon the aide of the American Ambassador. German police guard the embassy and keep callers in line. As a to-do of the German thoroughness in matter of detail the police stationed there have little signs on their sleeves indicating that they speak English. So far the police have had little to do but watch the Zeppelins and other aircraft circling about the city of their way to the frontier. Johanns, the German aviation station, has already turned over its hand to the government use.

So many requests have come from persons stranded here to have their predicament cabled to America that it would fill a newspaper to print half of them. The story is the same or nearly the same in every instance. "We are caught here, can't get out and have no ready cash." Judge Gerard has, however, taken admirable measures to meet emergencies and the Americans are keeping together in a solid organization, which provides relief to the most distressed.
