They then put themselves in row and appeared in the vicinity of the starting post at the coast of the course.

The course lay from this up the Kennelbank to a point in line with the quarters of the crew, and back to the place of starting the distance being three miles.

The race was got off about 11 o'clock in fine style, Brayley, who had choice of positions, slightly leading the other boats.

As the boats swept up the river, they pulled in a scull and pushed his antagonist hard.

At Appleby's wharf was leading a boat's length. Here both men were working well and doing approach.

With the energy or a man in real earnest. As the two boats glided up the course, keeping a wide distance.

Brayley gained slightly and headed his turning stake at about the time his rival did the other one.

He then stretched both worked with all and kept well together, Brayley leading until Appleby's wharf passed, when both boats were at the line.

At this point Brayley's boat was slightly ahead and he pulled in a scull and pushed his antagonist hard.
