Pocklington story from A1

growing complaints of homesickness.

The Pocklington deal is the latest in a series of questionable practices undertaken by candidates in an attempt to secure delegate votes. Pocklington's move is expected to incur the wrath of PC Party President, Peter Elzinga.

"Pocklington will be hearing from me," said Elzinga, who has been criticized for inaction in the controversial campaign. "The situation definitely calls for at least a ten minute misconduct. Maybe even a match penalty."

The proposed Gretzky-vote swap is expected to launch a new style of campaigning in the leadership race. Rumors from the John Crosbie camp have the former cabinet minister offering to move his home province of Newfoundland to a location just west of Vancouver Island.

A source close to Crosbie confirmed the proposal, but also outlined some of the difficulties involved in the move. Crosbie apparently refuses to relinquish the off-shore drilling rights. In addition, the Tory leadership hopeful has not revealed how he plans to manoeuvre Newfoundland through the Panama Canal.

Said the Crosbie aide: "If it was PEI, it'd be no problem."

Reaction from the other leadership candidates was one of shock and disbelief.

"It's not fair," cried former Prime Minister Joe Clark. "Pete's not playing by the rules."

It seems, however, that Pocklington is prepared to go to any length in his power play for the prime ministership.
