

Queen's hockey player is barred from play by eligibility Board

(OUAA press release) — Kevin Treacy of Queen's University was declared to be ineligible for OUAA hockey competition in 1975-1976 in a recent decision by the OUAA Board of reference.

Treacy played for a team in the International Hockey League in 1974-1975 as an amateur.

He enrolled as a student at Queen's in September of '75 and asked for clarification of his status as a candidate for the Queen's hockey team.

NO CONSIDERATION

The Board of Reference ruled that the OUAA By-Law on professionalism, clearly places Treacy on the ineligible category for the '75-76 season and unless the OUAA chooses to change the By-Law, no consideration can be given to the fact that Treacy did not sign a professional contract.

NOTE: The OUAA regulations on ex-professionals reads as follows: "The following hockey leagues shall be classified as professional; N.H.L., W.H.A., A.H.L., C.P.L., W.H.L., I.H.L., N.A.H.L., AND the S.H.L."

To become reinstated and eligible for OUAA competition, a professional athlete must meet the following conditions: Attend an educational institution as a full time student for the academic year after the termination of the professional experience. Academic year shall be defined as one year of full-time study, i.e. two terms, two semesters, or one semester or term and the equivalent of an additional semester or term in intersession or summer school study.

NO PAY, NO PLAY

During the time described above, he may not represent an OUAA institution in competition in that sport in which he has been classed as a professional.

For the period of one calendar year, originating with the commencement of his becoming a full-time student, he may not play professionally in that sport in which he has been classed professional.

Each year played in professional ranks shall be considered as one year of eligibility.
