The Pilot Superior Pipeless Furnace Heats Your Entire House

When the warm air leaves the register, it expands and rises naturally to the ceiling, where it is deflected and circulated through the doors or transoms. The cool air from all parts of the house moves at the lowest level towards the register. This circulation of air currents to and from the register tends to equalize the temperature. In the thousands of houses where the Pilot Superiors have been installed, the variation of temperature between that in the room or hall where the register is located and that in the other rooms is not noticeable. During the coldest weather of the winter of 1917-18 many owners reported temperatures of seventy degrees or more in their kitchens, bathrooms and second-floor back rooms.
