HALL SEAT AND STAIRCASE.
Dignified and Beautiful Lines Take Place of Gingerbread Effects of the Early Seventies—Value of Family Heirlooms Recognized Now.

Those who have followed the fashions in home furnishings of late years remember the so called "colonial craze," that mighty resurrection of fine old ideas of beauty and simplicity which swept over American homes within the memory of all but the youngest.

Stick of the highly carved golden oak suits, fussy parlor tables, upholstered furniture bedecked with tassels, fringe and amazing trimmings and all the atrocities in furniture with which the living rooms of our houses had blossomed forth after the black walnut monstrosities of an earlier day, ban-ishers, had woken up to the world and dignity and beauty of family heirlooms that had been, alas, given away or sold for a pittance in moments of folly, or perhaps more correctly stowed away in attic or cellar or barn to make place for some fashionable "novelty" from a furniture factory. One by one these pieces were monthly swept clean of their burial places to be refurnished and once more accorded a place of honor in the home, and from the more cultured to the less cultured homes the new interest in all things "colonial" spread until when the "colonial craze" was at its height small towns and outlying farmhouses from way down east to Dixie were pretty nearly swamped with their treasures by dealers and collectors. And still the search goes merrily on. The "colonial craze" has come and gone, but among American people of fine and sincere tastes the "quest of the colonial art" must ever prove an inspiration.

Then to have an appropriate setting for the resurrected heirlooms' homes have been built which have conserved within them all that was finest and best of the colonial period.

The illustration shown here is of a colonial seat and staircase in a beautiful home, in which both within and without the quaint charm, the straightforward sincerity, the rugged yet refined character and unassuming simplicity of that very romantic period have been preserved.

Colonial furniture and decorations are not merely a part of our own history, but were derived directly from the best period of English art—the eighteenth century. The sentiment which clings around the old resurrected pieces makes an appeal irresistible to the homemaker who dates her own ancestry back to colonial days. Fortunately there are faithful reproductions of authentic colonial furniture to be had today, worthy in all respects and at prices within reach of the modest home. Not all that is labeled colonial is worthy by any manner of means, but between the many good reproductions that can be had, the bargains still to be had in antique shops and at auction sales for those who look long and hard enough and the "finds" that even now reward the diligent "in quest of the colonial" there seems to be small excuse for accepting crude substitutes, especially in view of the wonderful opportunity for studying the best of colonial styles which the collections in public museums afford.

What is colonial furniture? Every one has some sort of idea of what it means by this very broad term, colonial, but how many have any definite conception of the word as applied to a period in the decorative arts in this country? Truth is that in its generally accepted meaning the colonial period has come to include much more than could be brought under its literal definition. Strictly speaking, this characterization belongs only to such furnishings as were imported into or made in the colonies before 1776. In our more liberal use of the term we class under the broad head of colonial furniture all that was used in this country from the days of the early settlers to the end of the eighteenth century, even sometimes stepping over into the early part of the nineteenth century.

NEW RULES

With Regard to the Consumption of Liquor in Saskatchewan.

Just exactly what the people of Saskatchewan may do and may not do under the new Sales of Liquor Act, which went into effect on July 1 is set forth in this summary of the new legislation.

On and after July 1 all bars in Saskatchewan will be closed.

On the same day Government liquor stores established throughout the province.

The Government liquor stores will remain open continuously from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

FOUR GALLONS A DAY
The maximum quantity of liquor that may be sold to a purchaser in one day is four gallons of beer or other malt liquor, two gallons of wine and one gallon of any other liquor.

The minimum amount that may be sold is 15 ounces.

All goods must be sold for cash, and a receipt must be given to each purchaser.

A penalty of $50 or one month's imprisonment attaches to the giving of a fictitious name.

No person after July 1 may consume any liquor within a city, town, village or hamlet except in a dwelling house.

A dwelling house includes every house or part of a house or building occupied bona fide and used solely as a place of abode.

A hotel is not classed as a dwelling house under the act, and no liquor may be consumed by the proprietor or his guests in any hotel or boarding house or restaurant licensed under the Public Accommodation Act.

CLUBS ARE BARRED
No liquor may be consumed in any club, whether incorporated or not.

No liquor may be consumed in any livery stable, garage, livery, office or grain elevator premises.

Any organization, whether incorporated or not, may apply for permission to the director of prosecutions five days in advance for permission to hold a banquet under certain conditions.

Only four permits will be granted to any organization each year.

The amount that may be served at such banquets is two quarts of beer or one pint of wine to each individual.

No banquet at which liquor is served may be held in a hotel, boarding house, restaurant or other place licensed under the provisions of the Hotel Act.

The sale of flavoring extracts or patent medicines is not interfered with.

NO PUBLIC DRINKING
No person shall drink publicly in any street car, passenger or freight train under a penalty on conviction of a fine of $50 or 30 days' imprisonment.

Any liquid containing more than one per cent. alcohol shall be deemed to be intoxicating.

A manufacturer in Saskatchewan may sell for delivery outside of the province, but cannot sell or deliver liquor in the province.

The law will be enforced by the N. W. M. P. who will be assisted by special constables.

Special magistrates will be appointed to deal with infractions of the Liquor Law.

No one may purchase liquor in Saskatchewan except from the Government.

CAN GET IT SHIPPED IN Anyone in Saskatchewan may have liquor shipped to him from outside the province for consumption in his own home.

Advertising liquors in newspapers and on billboards is prohibited, as is also the circulation of price lists and catalogues.

Physicians and veterinary surgeons may prescribe liquor, which may be sold by druggists. Physicians may also sell liquors under certain restrictions for medicinal purposes.
