SHUNTED ON A SWITCH

Legislative Offices of the Transvaal Government Now in Railway Car.

London, Friday, June 8, 3 a. m.—The executive officers of the Transvaal Government are in a railway car, which is shunted on a switch at Machadopolis Station. President Kruger caused the interior of the coach to be reconstructed some time ago, with a view to contingencies that have now arrived. A correspondent of the Daily Express who went from Lorenzo Marques to see President Kruger was received yesterday. The President sat smoking a long pipe. He looked worried, but his bearing was quiet and determined. He did not make the least objection to being interviewed. The correspondent was equipped for the interview by telegrams from London.

"Yes," said President Kruger, "it is quite true that the British have occupied Pretoria. This, however, does not end the war. The burghers are fully determined to fight to the last. They will never surrender so long as 500 armed men remain in the country. I feel deeply encouraged by the fine work Steyn and Dewet are doing in the Free State."

The correspondent suggested that the war was over, inasmuch as the capital had been taken.

"The capital!" exclaimed Mr. Kruger, with energy. "What is a capital? It does not consist of any particular collection of bricks and mortar. The capital of the republic, the seat of government, is here in this car. There is no magic about any special site. Our country is invaded it is true, but it is not conquered. The Government is still effective."

Referring to the reasons why he left Pretoria, Mr. Kruger said:—"I was not foolish enough to be taken prisoner. I provided this means of locomotion precisely for the same reason as our burghers supply themselves with horses when they take the field. It is necessary that I should be able to move quickly from place to place. That is all. By and by this car will take me back to Pretoria. For the present it enables me to keep away from Pretoria, where I could be of no service and where I should only play into the hands of the enemy."

"They say, Mr. Kruger," remarked the correspondent, "that you have brought gold with you to the value of $2,000,000."

"It is not true," replied the president.

A SCENE IN THE HOUSE

Whip Bourassa Makes a Pro-Boer Speech and is Hissed.

Ottawa, June 8.—Yesterday was the first time in its history that hisses were heard in the House of Commons, and these unusual signals of dissent were called forth by probably the first gratuitous expression of disloyalty ever uttered in the chamber. So long as Mr. Bourassa, the Government whip and Boer advocate from Labelle, confined his bombast to disquisitions drawn from pro-Boer pamphlets and delivered upon pertinent occasions of debate, his offensiveness was treated with the toleration due to inexperience and overweening conceit. But there were expressions of disgust and disapproval yesterday when the member for Labelle made a patriotic address, then being passed by Parliament to Her Majesty the Queen, the text of a disloyal attack upon the British cause in South Africa, and a studiously offensive reference to the achievements of the British army, in which Canada's noble sons have participated so prominently. These utterances were ill-timed and ill-mannered enough, to say the least of them. But in the exuberance of his conceit and blatant disloyalty Mr. Bourassa went further. He predicted for the Empire an era overwhelmed with trouble in South Africa, and justified a stubborn resistance to the establishment of British institutions there, on the plea that Great Britain's object was to impose upon that country the unfortunate policy that kept Canada in rebellion for 50 years. One salutary effect of this otherwise deplorable incident was the occasion it afforded for a general expression of loyal and patriotic feeling. No sooner had the member for Labelle resumed his seat, which he did amidst a renewed storm of dissent from all parts of the chamber, than Dr. Montague arose and suggested as an antidote to the disloyalty which the House had been obliged to listen to "Three cheers for Her Majesty." The response was electrifying in its spontaneity and enthusiasm. Never were cheers more heartily given—certainly never was the national anthem sung with greater gusto in Parliament.

In view of recent events which have taken place in South Africa," said the Prime Minister, "and the successes which have crowned the forces of Her Majesty, I have the honor to submit to the House a motion which I hope will commend itself to every member thereof. I beg to move, seconded by my honorable friend, Sir Charles Tupper, leader of the Opposition, that an address of congratulation be forwarded to Her Majesty, and Sir Wilfrid proceeded to read the address.

The Premier and Sir Charles both spoke in loyal terms to the address and then Mr. Bourassa got up.

BOURASSA'S OUTBURST.

"I regret that I cannot agree to the sentiments that have been expressed by the right honorable the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition," he began.

Mr. McCleary, Welland,—"If you cannot, you had better get out. (Opposition cheers.)"

Mr. Bourassa—"Of course, I know very well that what I am going to say is not according to the apparent feelings of all the members of this House. But since the opening of this unfortunate war I have made up my mind that I was not siding with any popular cry or any mob or crowd, and therefore, I will still upon this occasion express the views which I have already stated, and make the protest which I think is the expression of a large, if not the majority, of the Canadian population, not only of the French-Canadians, but also of a fair proportion of all the nationalists and creeds of the Dominion. (Loud cries of "No.")

Mr. Bourassa—"Honorable gentlemen might say 'No' if they liked, but he knew popular feeling as well as they did. (Renewed cries of "No.")

Anyhow, that is my opinion, and I am going to express it. Continuing, he said he joined in congratulating the brave soldiers who had fought in South Africa, but as to congratulating Her Majesty upon the policy which had brought this war upon the Empire he could not agree with them because these causes were unjust, and success did not make them just. He had not the experience in politics of the leader of the Opposition, but he ventured to say that future events would prove that this war was one of the most unfortunate things of English political history during the century. (Dis-sent.)

"What had it proved to the world about the power of England? It had taken an army of 200,000 men, composed not only of the best regiments of England, Ireland and Scotland, but also the best soldiers that could be gathered from the British colonies, and it took eight months for that powerful army to conquer an army of poor peasants, drawn from a total population of 250,000 souls, men, women and children. He acknowledged the power of England; he admitted many of the deeds that England had done throughout the world, but, continued Mr. Bourassa, this war will not add an ounce to the glory of the British flag and to the greatness of England.

A scene of great uproar followed this remark. Mr. Bourassa was vigorously hissed and there were loud cries of "Shame! shame!"

Mr. Fielding remarked:—"This is a free country."

Again the demonstration broke out and renewed cries of "Shame!"

Mr. Bourassa—"Is this a free Parliament? Is free speech allowed here?"

Mr. Foster exclaimed:—"Such a speech from a member of this House! Shame on him!"

Mr. Fielding again repeated:—"This is a free Parliament."

And the cries of "Shame!" and "Traitor!" were renewed.
