OUT OF THE SURF.

By K. F. HILL.

"It is worse than promiscuous, Fred, it is wicked! Hush, I can bear no more."
"But mother, Nettie is no ordinary nursery maid. She was a teacher, but she had typhus fever, the doctor ordered her to the seaside. She has had no means to come, and she has been brave enough to advertise for a position to take care of children. The work is not hard, and the lady who employs her recognizes that Nettie is an educated lady and treats her like a sister."
"Pshaw! The woman is not a society herself. Very likely this girl is her equal, but you are mad when you think of making her your wife. Consider the blood that runs in your veins."

Fred Vanderhoof sighed heavily. He was a young man, but possessed more than usual amount of common sense, and his mother often tried his patience sorely by her talk of blood, birth and ancient lineage. She was a widow and Fred her only son. She had another child, he was twenty-seven, but his sister was a tiny fairy of seven, the pride and pet of mother, brother, aunt, and cousins.
"You might marry any one of the widow resumed, with a pucker of discontent on her white forehead, "anyone of the belles here would gladly become your bride, and I dare say if you would cross the ocean you would win a lady of title. You are handsome, wealthy and thoroughly aristocratic."

"Mother, I will not say how un-American all that talk is. I love Nettie and intend to make her my wife. She is a true lady if she does occupy the position of nursery maid. If of course you are independent but you will break my heart." Mrs. Vanderhoof wrung her hands, and tears fell from her clear blue eyes, and ran down her smooth, pink cheeks. She had never known a care or sorrow, for the death of her husband had not grieved her, he had been an invalid for years and was her senior by so many years that his frivolous little wife had never felt much love for him.

She was proud and fond of her tall son, but Pearl her baby, was the dearest on earth to the gay little widow.

"What is so agreeable and mysterious about this?" she often complained, "that we shall never get on. I am sensitive and romantic, and he neither understands nor sympathizes with me." The apartment where this conversation took place was the reception room of Mrs. Vanderhoof's cottage. It was a beautiful room, and in its furnishing and decoration the handiwork of the civilized world had been employed. Fine oil paintings from the brushes of famous artists and tapestries from Turkish and Persian looms adorned the walls, and rugs of rich designs covered the floor, while costly lamps, vases and bric-a-brac were seen every where.

As the widow sat lamenting, an unusual noise and bustle outside attracted her attention—a confusion of tongues and a shuffling of feet.

"What's the matter?" she cried springing up in affright.

Fred was already in the entrance hall, and there beheld a group of men who carried, on a hastily improvised litter the form of his idolized little sister.

"Oh, my darling!" screamed the mother, and fell insensible upon the floor.

A doctor accompanied the sad procession, and the child was immediately placed in a warm bed and every means used to call back the spirit which seemed to have left forever the tiny waxen form.

"If the child's life is spared you owe it to the brave girl who plunged boldly into the sea, to save her," said the doctor to Mrs. Vanderhoof, who now stood sobbing by his side.

"Who was it?" she asked. "Oh, I shall reward her! Who is she?"

"She has been taken to the hotel where she was boarding. She is utterly exhausted, and her swim out of her own clothing, and nearly lost her own life in saving the child. The men who stood idly by should hang their heads in shame."

"Oh, the noble girl! Who was she?"

"I do not know. There, Madame, that is the first heart-beat I have felt distinctly. Put a little brandy between her lips while I hold her head."

After a terrible anxious hour little Pearl was pronounced out of the danger, and lay smiling feebly at her mother who sat beside her, laughing and crying both at once.

"Ah, to think of my darling battling with those cruel waves!" she sobbed. "I shall go away from this seaside and sell my estate. How did such a terrible accident happen?"

Pearl was too weak to explain, but Mrs. Vanderhoof soon learned from other sources. The French maid who had charge of the child had stopped to gossip with one of her countrywomen and Pearl had been lowered down to a pier. There she sported with the other children, and forgotten by her attendant Justine, she had encountered the deadly peril.

A hasty rush along the pier, a misstep, and the little one was in the ocean, a white, helpless floating atom tossed to and fro by the outgoing tide.

Fortunately a brave heart and strong arm were near by. Nettie Haywood, who was taking care of some children on the beach, saw the child's headlong plunge from the pier without a moment's hesitation. She was a girl sprung to the rescue. She was a daring swimmer, but her strength was well nigh spent ere she reached the drowning child. She succeeded however in seizing her, and boldly struck out for the shore. Her vigorous strokes grew weaker, and the weight of her garments and the insensible child were too much for her. She feebly battled with the heavy surf which was rolling on to sea, but the struggle was unequal and no sooner had ended in defeat. No thought of abandoning her helpless burden ever crossed Nettie's mind.

NIAGARA FALLS.

We give below an extract from a letter written by Miss Emma Goodwin, formerly of Bale Verte, now of Boston, to a friend in Bale Verte giving a description of a trip from Boston to Minneapolis.

"At six o'clock Monday evening, July 6th, our train, consisting of six Wagner vestibule cars, all containing C. E. Deleates, steamed from the Fitchburg Depot. I had never been in sleeping cars before and was quite delighted to find them so cosy and parlor like. We could move about from one car to another just as we were going into another room in a house. Miss Ayers, from my own church at Berkeley Temple, went in our car, and Miss Heinz, my literary circle special friend, accompanied us as far as Chicago. These were the only acquaintances I met on the train, but of course was anxiously looking forward to some possible reunion with friends I had formerly known."

"As soon as we got nicely settled we began to look about to see who our companions were, and it was very pleasant to know that we were all brothers and sisters. We were anxious to speak to one another. Did we not all have the same aim? and was not sociability one of the highest principles of our C. E. Society?"

"That evening Miss Ayers and I went through the train to see what was going on. In one of the cars we found an unusual number gathered, and some one was singing. I believe it was a choir of the cars every morning, and evening devotionals. We paid fifty cents each for the vehicle for the afternoon. The first point of interest, which claimed our attention, was the rapids above the falls. It took us but a short time to reach the falls, and we all exclaimed, "How grand," as we gazed at the rushing, scurrying, eddying, waters. We crossed a bridge over these waters and came on to Goat Island. The trees on this island and almost in their native simplicity, and I believe it is the aim of the government to keep them so. We stepped over our carriages, walked on upon a little ledge, and then the Falls in all their grandeur, the stupendous, tumbling, majestic, and beautiful Niagara, opened up.

"Miss Ayers and I with a party of several gentlemen, led by a guide, went under one of the Falls, in a place called the Cave of the Winds. It was a somewhat detached section of the great American Falls, and although it is small and only a very faint idea of the beauty of the Horse Shoe Fall. We crossed over with many different spots, and a new and mighty force. As we earnestly gazed the wonderful magnificence of the scene, and fresh raptures opened up.

"The only radical cure for rheumatism is to eliminate from the blood the cause that causes the disease. This is thoroughly effected by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Persist until cured. The process may be slow, but the result is sure."

"The experience of shipping melons direct from Georgia to England is being made, two crates weighing forty pounds per melon having been shipped. If they get there in good condition it is hoped to create a large demand there for them, as now they only get a few small and poor specimens from Spain."

A NARROW ESCAPE.—I would probably have been in my grave to-day had it not been for Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. For two years I suffered from blood complaint and became weak and thin, but after using half a bottle of the Extract I was completely cured and have since had no return of the complaint. —Miss Hilton, 37 Huntley St., Toronto.

A new English process of making phosphoric acid by electricity, the raw material and coke are all fed into a specially designed furnace, reduced to vapor by electric heat, and the phosphoric acid condensed into marketable phosphoric acid. The elaborate chemical treatment of the raw materials hitherto practised is thus avoided. The world's annual consumption of phosphoric is only about 2,000 tons.

Baird's Balsam of Horehound is not an experiment; established over 50 years.

Will you heed the warning. The signal perhaps of the sure approach of that terrible disease, Consumption. The city of Bremen will probably soon enjoy the distinction of being the first German city in which horses will have been wholly supplanted by electric power for street car service. The street car system has been worked electrically for some time by the Thompson-Houston Company and as great arrangements are being made with this company to fit up the whole Bremen system on its principle.

Don't You Forget It.—I will never forget that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry saved my life. Five years ago I had a terrible attack of summer complaint, and was given up by the doctor and my parents. A friend advised Fowler's Strawberry and at the second dose I was relieved and soon was well as ever. —Maggie McGillicuddy, Falkenburg, Ont.

"Certain hard words, made into pills, simply to swell the doctors' bills, are not what constitute Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pills. They are tiny, sugar-coated, purely vegetable pills as pleasant as confectionery to the taste and acting upon the stomach and liver gently but effectively, and as naturally as Nature herself. For sick headache, indigestion, biliousness, constipation and all the resulting diseases, no laxative equal to them has ever been discovered."
