

THE MORNING COURIER FOR THE COUNTRY, MARCH 30, 1837.

MONTREAL, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 29, 1837.

The packet-ships Westminster, 17th February from London, and North America, 18th from Liverpool, have arrived at New York, and brought English papers of the above dates. Our files not having been forwarded by yesterday's United States Mail, the annexed extracts are taken from New York journals.

We find no mention of the actual resumption of payments by the Messrs. Warwick & Clappett, of London, (a branch of the American) are largely interested); but from the annexed extracts it appears that such a resumption was expected.

LONDON, Feb. 9.—We refrained from alluding yesterday to the fact, that an American mercantile firm had been placed in dissolution; as there were expectations that the firm of Warwick & Clappett would have obtained some time ago, to overcome their temporary difficulties. We regret to state, however, that the firm have been compelled to suspend payments; but it is expected that they will be able to make arrangements for the resumption of their business.

LONDON, Feb. 10.—The leading members of the lumber trade have held a public meeting by the instruction of government, to consider the duty upon timber of foreign growth, and the amount of an evenning contemporary, that the lumbering system is a curse to our North American colonies, is detrimental to their property, and basely selfish. What will our expeditious political economists do next?

The lumber trade has been in a state of decline, and there is every reason to conclude that it will soon cease. Very simple experience has convinced us that the decline is attended with incessant drought and irritation, at first spasmodic, and in the upper part of the throat, but spreading to the entire body, and long-continued, it, or withstand the indignant condemnation of his conduct by a united people. We publie opinion to cease operating, neither the law of the land nor religious obligations could restrain men from the commission of a more numerous class of crimes, which this same derided opinion now cures.

The resolution, above quoted, asserts that Mr. RUTTAN "gave a public pledge at the hustings to support the equal rights of all classes." This gentleman's case is by no means singular. He is not the only one who has spoken and voted in the House in the teeth of his pledges at the hustings.

But it is not so bad. His conduct tends to the lungs, and then requires venesection, diaphoretics, &c. During convalescence there is great debility or prostration of strength, which is alleviated by the use of a moderate quantity of distict and medicinal stimulants, wine, diluted spirituous liquors, &c.—London Medical and Surgical Journal.

There are upwards of 6000 acres of land in Dorsetshire, Lower Lincolshire, now under water, owing to the breaking of the Greta river bank. Many of the inhabitants have been driven to the towns, whilst others seek a dry place of shelter in the upper chambers of their houses, from which they cannot go without water.

DEATH OF THE REV. DR. CLARKE.—The Rev. George Clarke, Dr. of Divinity, of Great Walham, who was confined in the said goal, in consequence of his illness of a few hours. Lady Erdine was the eldest daughter of the late Honorable John Francis, Earl of Mar, and aunt to the present Earl of Mar and Kellie.—Scottish Guardian.

We have to state the death of the Marquis of Drogheda, aged 65, on Saturday, March 18th, in Dublin, having undergone a violent attack of rheumatism. In early life he was a member of the Irish Parliament, and was a member of the 18th Light Dragoons.

The first failure of a house arranged in the Irish trade, and whose habitation are said to amount to £140,000; the second of a manufacturing chemist; and the third of an individual engaged in the East India trade. The two last failures were not for any very great amount.

Yesterday, at St. George's Church, Hanover-square, the long-expected nuptials of the Honorable Sir Egerton and the Earl of Winchilsea took place at half past one. The Bishop of Oxford performed the ceremony. The young lady, daughter of Sir Charles and Lady Egerton, born for several years past, in Dublin, who, with her beauty, is equally equalled by accomplishments and the attractions of her situation. Most of the relations of the two families were present, including the Duke of Wellington, Lord and Lady Granville, the venerable Mr. Hutton, &c. &c.—Lady May Fox, with whom the young lady has for some months been travelling, and through whom she has been brought up, gave her away. The happy couple left town immediately for Lady Egerton's villa, in Richmond Park, whence, in a few days, they proceed to Lord Winchilsea's fine place at Eastwell, in Kent. After the ceremony, those who waited partook of an excellent meal, prepared for them at the Marybone Hotel in Sevilleton.

WORCESTER, Feb. 15.—Shipwreck and loss of life.—The steamer Robinson, from Liverpool for New York, struck on the banks near Tuckar this morning, and went down in about 25 fathoms of water: mate, one seaman, and about fifteen steerage passengers drowned.

LONDON, Monday Evening, Feb. 16.—There is a most painful feeling in the country today, though it would be too much to say that the symptoms of distress, have wholly disappeared. It is at least something gained, in the general estimation that the weekly meeting of the Bank Directors has given out, any hint of any new measure, and on the contrary, it may be said, that they are understood to have a disposition to risk something in quarters where it was shown that such a course would be usefully beaten. Of course the utmost strictness of investigation, in all such cases is made an absolute condition before-hand.

This more tranquil feeling in the money market seems to be the chief cause that the English Stock market has displayed considerable activity since the 1st of February, with improvements in some of the quotations.

STATE OF TRADE AND THE MONEY MARKET IN LIVERPOOL.—In all our experience we never recollect such a cloud to have rested over the Exchange—trade to have received such a check—commercial credit to have been so low an ebb.

The state of things is, indeed, truly frightful, and the number of bankruptcies have been few—and it is the opinion of experienced men, that the crisis would have over-wrought any, or at all events may more fully, if some way could be devised to restore confidence. It is generally agreed, through the Bank of England, can do any thing, to effect so desirable a result, and that will be done.

It is one thing, if mere adventurers were to benefit by this sudden transition from unrestricted to limited issues—but it is not so—no—of real wealth and undoubted means are placed at the disposal of the nation, and the commercial world, which can be turned to all credit. An extended credit, would be called in, and curtailed at a moment's notice—but many of this class, who can give unbounded security, ought to have such relief afforded to them as would enable them to struggle through the temporary difficulties which are likely to befall them.

It is the opinion of the Bankers, that the crisis will turn their attention to the subject—and, as we said before, without a moment's delay—What they do for us, is surely, a practical benefit such as this, is worth a thousand theories.—London Chronicle.

The Lord Lieutenant of Upper Canada, has issued a circular, calling on the militia, to assist in quelling the rebellion in Lower Canada.

Accounts have been received of a failure to Liverpool in the grocery line, for £350,000.—Star.

Vice-Admiral Sir Robert Otway, respects the Hon. Admiral Elphinstone Fleming in the command of Sirnas.

During the past week alone the city and county coroners have held no less than thirty-four inquests on the bodies of persons who came by their death by drowning.—Daily Paper.

SARAS, OR THE VIXEN.—In the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.

Lord Palmerston and the subject were too late to be lightly dealt with, and gentlemen could not understand Government's position.

It is the opinion of Government, that such statements would make the world, and show what steps it might be necessary to take.

SIE W. MOLESWORTH, in the House of Commons, moved for leave to bring in a Bill abolishing the qualification of Members of Parliament as to the amounts paid in making their election.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.—Mr. Ruttan, in the House of Commons, Feb. 15, Mr. Maclean had on a formal occasion read the noble Secretary's statement to the House of Commons to take the opinion of the law officers of the Crown on the views of the Vixen. He wished to know whether that opinion had been taken, and if there would be any objection to lay it before the House.