A MOTHER'S OPINION

Mrs. J. Snelling, Underwood, Ont., says that she has used Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup in her family for the past eight years, and she knows of nothing so good for children who suffer from worms.

A Sustaining Diet.

These are the enervating days, when as somebody has said, men drop by mistake as if the Day of Fire had dawned. They are fraught with danger to people whose systems are poorly sustained; and this leads us to say in the interest of the less robust of our readers, that the full effect of Hood's Sarsaparilla is such as to suggest the propriety of calling this medicine something besides a blood purifier and tonic; say a sustaining diet. It makes it much easier to bear the heat, assures refreshing sleep, and will with any doubt avert much sickness at this time of year.

Recently the Philadelphia Ledger published the following, taken from a collection of complaints, excuses and the like, written by parents to the teachers of the public schools of that city: "Miss Brown: You must stop teaching my little child torture she needs yet readin and figurs suit summore as that, if I want her to do jump in I kin make her jump."

Judging by Speech and Manners.

No parents who have the means to buy decent clothes would allow a son or daughter to go out in search of a position without seeing to it that he or she is neatly dressed. Appearance counts for much, and clothes and a clean face are so obvious that they are usually well attended to. Manners come next. They should come first, it may be; but, not to quarrel about that, they generally get some attention in the final instructions, if it is nothing more than "Now mind your manners, Jimmy, and be polite to the gentlemen." There still remains one thing—we are now considering appearance, not character—and that is the speech of the applicant, the language in which he states his case and answers questions. Here it is that many a boy or girl undoes all that neat clothes, clean hands and an acceptable demeanour have accomplished. "Are your parents living?" "Nope—er—that is, not both of them ain't. I got a mother, but I ain't got no father. Indeed, he does not get any further, because the prospective employer does not want a boy from a home where such language is used. This may be an unjust way to look at it. In particular cases it would be very unjust, for gentle, correct speech is not guarantee of morals or intelligence or industry; but usually, one who meets a stranger, about whom he has had opportunity to learn little or nothing, can hardly avoid judging him somewhat by his manner of speaking; and it is in the home, in the ordinary course of daily life and conversation, that habits of speech are learned and become fixed. In some families the trouble is, of course, lack of early advantages. Here the only remedy is the resolve that the children shall have those advantages. But more often the blame must be laid to carelessness and ill-mannered parents. A little thought, a little attention here will count for much.—S. H. Review.

Landowners say he can do nothing, and so it has come to pass that British subjects in France are robbed of their property for no reason whatever, except that they are Catholics.

The annual report of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul in England shows that there are 2,196 active and 1,023 honorary members. The total number of visits paid during 1902 was 94,068. There were 101 orphan children being wholly or partially supported by the society and 4,380 boys under the care of the "patronage" branch of the society. The total receipts for the year were £2,186, being an increase of £28 on those of 1901, the total expenditure was £1,897, being a decrease of £138 on that of the previous year. The annual meeting of the society was this year held in Liverpool on July 25 and 26, and was presided over by the Marquis of Ripon, and president of the society.

Says the "London Catholic Times": Apropos of the discussions in the daily press as to whether or in case Bishop Hedley, who preached the panegyric of Cardinal Vaughan, or Abbot Gasquet—both men of learning and ability—were considered a most suitable successor to his Eminence the fact of belonging to the Benedictine Order would prevent appointment, it may be stated that there were twenty-four Benedictine Archbishops of Canterbury.

A grand old man has passed away in Australia in the person of Mr. Rigney, of the Archdiocese of Sydney, who had reached the age of ninety-one. Mr. Rigney was a native of Ballinalone, County Galway. After his ordination in Maynooth he accompanied Archbishop Ullathorne to Australia.

The French Academy still preserves its conservative spirit. The two latest vacancies in its membership have been filled by the election of Frederic Mazon, the historian of Napoleon per excellence, and Rene Basile, a clean novelist, whose novels nevertheless sell by the hundred thousand. "Free thought," which in France invariably means unbelief, calls Basile inartistic, yet the Academy has chosen him for his style, and the Paris correspondent of the New York Evening Post says that his books of travel are a delight in their simplicity and sweet reasonableness. He is a Catholic in more than name.

Items of Catholic Interest.

Mgr. Turin, Bishop of Nancy, has certainly scored heavily over the French Government. It will be remembered that the courageous Bishop himself installed in the pulpit of his cathedral and ordered to preach a former Jesuit father, Pere Raveneau, who had become secularized owing to the persecution. This was treated by the government as an evasion of the law against the religious congregations, and the ex-Jesuit was held before the tribunals. The Courts of Appeal of Paris and Rome, and finally the Court of Cassation, have held that having become a secular, the former Jesuit had a right to exercise in the fullness of the sacred ministry and gave judgment against the government. Mgr. Turin, from the pulpit of his Cathedral, has now addressed a stirring allocution again challenging the government, closing his discourse with these words: "Now, the second question which I wish to put by a second act of my ministry and episcopal authority is this: Do the Catholics of France desire to avail of the rights which are still theirs and to defend energetically those which are and will be attacked? Do the French people wish to be respected, honored, free people, or a pack of slaves cowed under a servitude which may become boundless? That is why I intend to put into effect the right which has been maintained by the judgment of the Court of Cassation. This is why, in virtue of the authority of the Catholic Church, in the name of the rights of French citizens in the name of justice and liberty, invoking the civil law and its interpretation by the sovereign authority of the Court of Cassation, in virtue of my episcopal authority, I order M. Pabbé Raveneau to ascend anew this pulpit and announce to this gathering the word of God. 'Verbum Dei non est alligatum.'"

Dum Gasquet, as president of the English Benedictines, writes to the "London Times" a strong letter of complaint at the expulsion of the English Benedictines from their colleges at Douai. Although assurances were extended that the English Benedictines would not be expelled, they were suddenly sequestered and received notice to quit France within three months. That period expired on the 6th of July. Besides expelling the English Benedictines, the French Government has seized their property and buildings without any shadow of title whatever. Something of the same kind happened before so far back as 1870, but in that case the English Government compelled France to pay compensation for the injury done. In the present case the Benedictines have invoked the English Foreign Office vainly. Lord

Rev. F. O. F. Hunter, late Anglican curate of Dorwell, Cambridge, and for several years a chaplain in the Royal navy, has been received into the Catholic Church at St. Joseph's Bishop's Stallford, by the Rev. O. R. Vassall Phillips, C. S. R.

Mr. Carnegie has written as follows to Rev. Philip Murphy, secretary to the building committee of Queenstown Catholic Cathedral: "Your favor regarding organ for Queenstown Cathedral was brought here to Arday. You state that two thousand pounds sterling are required. If you succeed in raising one-half of this, it will give me pleasure to supply the other half."

Mgr. Lathole, Bishop of Vannes, after a procession of the Blessed Sacrament recently mounted the pulpit of his cathedral and addressed the following words to the assembled worshippers: This is no time for talking, he said but for acting. The storm let loose upon us no longer allows the captain to doubt of the danger which threatens his ship. If we are again to see the days of sorrow which have darkened our past history; if, through the increasing fury of the impious, we are called on to leave everything, even death, in defence of our religion and our liberty, in that case I make oath before God and you all that I shall die at your head rather than betray my post. His audience was deeply impressed at the brave Bishop's determined words.

It is stated that the membership of the Franciscan order recently presented at the general chapter held in Rome was as follows: Members, 16,482, including 7,572 priests and 3,304 students; provinces 76, houses, 2,274, "missionary countries," 67, districts, 26 in South America, 14 in North America, 11 each in Asia and Europe, 4 in Africa and 1 in Australia. In these missions there are 4,963 missionaries.

The French Senate has put the government somewhat in a quandary by refusing to identify itself with another of the ill-fated projects of M. Combes claimed Parliamentary sanction. It is one of the fundamental articles of the French Constitution that the French taxpayer cannot be made to pay more than the maximum of the taxes voted by Parliament. M. Combes, in the prosecution of his Anti-clerical policy, decided that in places where the municipal Council would not supply the funds necessary to build the new schools required by the expulsion of the congregations, the Prefect, as representing the Executive, should have power to saddle the district with such a tax as he might consider necessary for the purpose. The Chamber, of course, gave M. Combes all the powers he wanted, but the Senate in France has also a veto in financial matters, and it refused to sanction such an important breach of the Constitution of the country for the purpose of facilitating M. Combes' task.

It is generally confirmed that the King of Belgium has given directions for the construction of a big basilica like that of the Sacre-Coeur of Montmartre, Paris, on the Koekelberg, a nicely wooded acclivity near Brussels, and that the church is to be served by the Oblate Fathers of the Belgian province of their congregation. This news was published several months ago by the "Gazette," but no notice was taken of it in Paris. It has been confirmed by the Catholic Belgian paper, the "Patriote," and by the "Figaro." It appears that the King of the Belgians conceived the idea of building the basilica after the death of Queen Maria Henriette. The "Figaro" says that he has personally come to Paris to study the Montmartre Basilica, and that he went to confession and Holy Communion there. This is the King in a new aspect, for some of the French papers have been endeavoring to spread the impression that he is an indifferent or apathetic Catholic, and that he prefers the "feyer de la dame" of the Paris opera to any place, including his beautiful grounds at Laeken and his winter paradise near Nice and Monte Carlo. The Brussels Basilica will be organized under the superintendence of the Archbishop of Mechlin, and it is thought that it will cost twenty millions of francs or $3,840,000. The King has already subscribed $32,000, and the rest of the money will no doubt be easily raised among the wealthy aristocracy and the equally wealthy commercial and industrial magnates of Belgium.

Get the Most Out of Your Food

You don't and can't if your stomach is weak. A weak stomach does not digest all that is ordinarily taken into it, it gets first easily, and what is left is digested in waste.

Among the signs of a weak stomach are: uneasiness after eating, fits of nervous headache, and disagreeable belching.

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia for years, and tried every remedy I heard of, but never got anything that gave me relief until I took Hood's Sarsaparilla. I cannot praise this medicine too highly for the good it has done me. I always take it in the spring and fall and would not be without it."—W. A. Kewer, Belleville, Ont.
