Rare Chance to Secure a College Education.

We have made arrangements that enable us to place within the reach of a limited number of deserving students, opportunities for securing, on easy terms, a classical or commercial education. A little work during the vacation season will secure this for the one worthily striving for such a boon, but who may not be in possession of sufficient money to realize his heart's desire. The facilities at our disposal enable us to offer a year's board and tuition at to any three young men who will fulfill the necessary, easy conditions required. These may be beginners, or former students of the College who have not been able to complete their course. In addition to this we have at our disposal four scholarships at the of Charlottetown. A full course in this excellent Commercial College may be won by any four young men or women, in town or country, who will fulfill the easy conditions we require. Whenever anyone satisfies the requirements in either of the cases enumerated he or she will be given a certificate entitling the holder to the educational advantages offered. A rare opportunity is here placed within reach of those desirous of acquiring a good education, and no time should be lost in taking advantage thereof. Only a little work is required in order to secure the coveted boon, and all can easily be accomplished during this summer's vacation, so that the winners may enter either college at the opening of the next academic year.

The Catholic Encyclopedia.

The first volume of the new Catholic Encyclopedia, published by the Robert Appleton Company, New York, has been received. This Catholic Encyclopedia, when completed, consists of fifteen volumes of 800 pages each with 2,000 maps and illustrations. It is the first work of the kind to be printed in the English language, and will present its readers with the full body of Catholic teaching; not only precise statements of what the Church has defined, but also an impartial record of different views of acknowledged authority on all disputed subjects.

The Catholic Encyclopedia gives the whole truth without prejudice, national, political or factional, and employs in the determination of the truth the most recent and acknowledged scientific methods, with the results of the latest research in Theology, Philosophy, History, Apologetics, Archaeology, and the other branches of human knowledge.

It differs from the general encyclopaedia in omitting facts and information which have no relation to the church, and records all that Catholics have done for the intellectual and artistic development of mankind. It is enabled to do this by utilizing the services of the foremost Catholic scholars—and some other specialists in every part of the world, to contribute articles in the condensed form that appeals to the man of action with the accuracy that satisfies the scholar.

It is not exclusively a church encyclopedia, nor is it limited to the ecclesiastical sciences and the dogmas of churchmen. The general reader who goes to it for specific subjects will find in addition information of the broadest scope and value in its summaries of results on the entire cycle of Catholic interest and doctrine, and on all subjects directly and indirectly related to the Catholic Church in every department of human knowledge.

In the bibliographies added to each article the student has ready a valuable list of the most authoritative works in all languages on the topic treated.

The Philosopher, the Scientist, the Bible Student, the Architect, the Lawyer, the Doctor, the Business Man, the Sociologist, the Historian, the Statesman, lays in its pages the means of informing themselves about a vast institution, which, whether they are Catholics or not, affect their fortunes and their destiny. We shall refer to the work at greater length in future issues.

Talk, Work and Amusement.

"The thoughts of youth are long, long thoughts," Longfellow sings. He who comprehends them gets near to the heart of youth. But who tries to do it? The boy is as great an enigma to his father, as a rule, as the old Sphinx in the Egyptian desert is to passing travellers. And who but his father ought to have the key to the boy's mind, and find his way into his recesses so gently and so carefully that the question of his child's vocation would be an easy one for him to answer?

If the religious vocations in this country are not equal in number to what they ought to be, we may attribute it to these two causes: the general desire to make money, and the placid indifference of parents. A boy is sent to "school"—school implying a sort of factory from which human creatures are turned out polished and finished, but not ready for any special work in the world which demands specialists. And what is specialism but the industrious working out of a vocation?

God is very good to a man when that man is true to his vocation. To be content in one's work is almost happiness. To do one's work for the eyes of God is to be as near happiness as any creature can come to it in this world. Fortunately are they who, like the old sculptors of the roof of the cathedral over sea, learn early in life, as Miss Eleanor Donnelly puts it—

"That nothing avails us under the sun
In word or in work, save that which is done
For the honor and glory of God alone."

Direction and coercion are two different things. The parents who mistake one for the other make a fatal error. Direction is the flower, coercion the weed that grows beside it, and kills its strength and sweetness.

The true gospel of work begins with the consideration of vocation, and the prayers and the appeals to the sacraments that ought to accompany it. This is the genesis of that gospel. It is true that if a man can be helped to take care of the first twenty years of his life, the last twenty years will take care of him. Those who find their vocation are blessed—

"And they are the sculptors whose works shall last,
Whose names shall shine as the stars on high,
When deep in the dust of a ruined past
The labors of selfish souls shall lie."
—From "A Gentleman."

The Little Joys of Life.

Has enthusiasm gone out of fashion? Are the young no longer hero-worshippers? A recent writer complains of the absence of American youth. "The absence of animal spirits among our well-to-do, young people is a striking contrast to the exuberance of that quality in most European countries," says this author, in the Atlantic Monthly.

Our young people laugh very merrily, but they are not, as a rule, cheerful; and they are amiable only when they "feel like being amiable." This is the most fatal defect in American manners among the young. The consideration for others shown only when a man is entirely at peace with himself is not politeness at all; it is the most unrefined manifestation of selfishness.

Before we condemn the proverbial artificiality of the French, let us contrast it with the brutality of the average carper at this artificiality. "A Frenchman," we will say, "will lift his hat to you, but he would not give you a son, if you were starving." Let us take that assertion for its full value. We are not starving; we do not want his son, but we do want to have our every-day life made as pleasant as possible. And is your average brutal and bluff and uncivilized creature the more anxious to give his substance to the needy because he is ready on all occasions to tread on the toes of his neighbor? He holds all a tereed pleasant things to be lie, and the suppression of the brutal a sin against truth. One sees this passage too often not to understand him well. He is half-civilized. King Henry VIII. was of this kind—charming, bluff old fellow, bubbling over with truth and frankness, slapping Sir Thomas More on the back, and full of delectable horseplay, when his dinner agreed with him! It is easy to comprehend that the high politeness of the best of the French is the result of the finest civilization. Now Tallardier looked back and said that no man really enjoyed life who had not lived before the Revolution.

But why should enthusiasm have gone out? Why should the young have no heroes? Have the newspaper-joke, the levity of Logan, and the irreverence of the stump-speaker, the cynicism of Puck and the insolence of Judge, driven out enthusiasm? George Washington is mentioned—what inextinguishable laughter follows!—the cherry-tree, the little hatchet! What novel wit that name suggests! One must laugh, it is so funny! And, then, the scriptural passages! The paragraphs have made Job so very amusing; and Joseph and Daniel—how stupid people must be who do not roar with laughter at the mere mention of these august names!—From "A Gentleman."

Items of Interest.

Rev. M. A. Dillon, P. P. Dagh, County Kerry, Ireland is dead, after forty-two years in the mission. He was educated and ordained in Rome.

The priests of the Diocese of Derry, Ireland, have chosen Mr. McHugh, D. D. P. P., Strabane as Dignissimus for the vacant see; the Very Rev. P. Boyle, president of the Irish College, Paris, as Dignior, and the Very Rev. Dr. O'Keane, president of St. Columba's College, Derry, as Dignus.

"I learned some time ago," writes the Roma correspondent of the London "Catholic Times," "that the Rev. George Tyrrell had communicated with Rome on the subject of dogmatic teaching. Now I hear that his massive was a letter to the Pope, and that it was of such nature as to sever the brilliant writer from the Catholic communion."

Rev. Alexander R. G. Ho, M. A. of Trinity College, Cambridge, formerly vicar of Elvaston, Derby, and rector of Gt. Gwilt, Wiltshire is one of the latest converts to the Catholic faith. He was received into the Church on March 8, at Bath by the Rev. Donatus Sweeney, O.S.B. Among the immediate causes of his conversion was the reading of a company it. This is the genesis of anti-Catholic, violently partisan Froude was a signpost pointing out to Mr. Goldie the right direction, and bestriding that Froude may do the same good turn to many others.

Prince Francois d'Assise Louis Marie d'Arberg, who was a leading member of the Catholic Centre party in the German Reichstag, died recently, after a long illness, which had withdrawn him for several months from public life. In the last general election Prince d'Arberg was returned by an enormous majority.

On February 21 the House of Commons, for the eighteenth time, discussed the measure for legalizing marriage with a man's deceased wife's sister. Lord Talbot opposed it because such marriages were forbidden by the Catholic Church, and only rendered possible by dispensation in certain exceptional cases. Whereupon Sir Henry Fowler rejoined that "Lord Talbot's speech had blown to the wind the idea that the Catholic Church could be quoted as opposed to the bill. If it were admitted that it was within the disposing power of the ecclesiastical authority to permit these marriages, they were obviously not contrary to religion."

"The Lenten courses in the different churches of Rome have proceeded normally except in one instance," says "Rome," the new weekly published in English. "At San Carlo in Corso the young Franciscan friar, Father Draghetti, has from the very first produced an extraordinary impression. The congregations have grown with every succeeding sermon, until the Church, which is one of the largest in the Eternal City, has become too small to hold all who wished to hear the eloquent preacher. For more than a week past hundreds of persons have waited on the steps outside for an hour before the beginning of the function in order to secure a place. Once or twice an attempt at applause was made within the church after some particularly impassioned or brilliant period of the discourse, but was immediately repressed by the preacher. Then some of the people began to wait for him outside after the sermon and to cheer him as he drove away to his monastery. It was a peaceful demonstration, but it did not suit the taste of the anti-religious of Rome. Two days this week they organized a counter-demonstration. When the friar appeared they greeted him with shouts of 'Viva Giordano Bruno!' and so jeered and insulted the congregation that the police were obliged to interfere. Then they attacked the police, and for a while a riot seemed to be imminent."

Many Catholics will be surprised to hear, says a writer in the "Catholic weekly," of London, that there are two reliquaries in the British Museum, each containing what purports to be a thorn from our Lord's crown of thorns. One of them is in the Waddesden Bequest Room, and is a beautiful Spanish sixteenth century work in gold. The reliquary is adorned with twenty-two figures, representing the Holy Trinity and a choir of angels, as well as a great number of rubies, pearls and sapphires. At its base are the words "Esta est una spina coronae domine nostri," and two other words which could not be deciphered. The thorn can be easily seen, and is about the length of a forefinger. The other reliquary is in the Gem Room, and is in the form of a locket, in the centre of which a small thorn can be seen, the edge of the locket being formed of immense amethysts. Within there are depicted scenes from the Passion in translucent enamel. This thorn is said to have been given to a King of Arragon by St. Louis, who bought the crown of thorns from the Venetians.

The eloquent Scottish Jesuit, Father Campbell, lately lectured in Glasgow on the trials which led the Highland Catholics to emigrate to Nova Scotia. He praised them for the manner in which they had retained their religion and their mother-tongue, and said that there are at present more Gaelic-speaking Catholics in Nova Scotia than in the whole of the Highlands of Scotland. Father Campbell concluded by saying that he had received and accepted an invitation to preach a mission in this Province.—Osako.

As soon as the news of the explosion in the "Jena" was heard in Toulon, several priests went to the naval hospital to minister to the wounded and dying, eighty in number. The priests were refused admission, however, on the pretext that the new regulations did not permit them to enter unless their services were asked for.—Osako.

Thousands of women suffer untold misery every day with aching backs that really have no business to ache. A woman's back was made to ache. Under ordinary conditions it ought to be strong and ready to help her bear the burdens of life.
